FORTROSE IN ROSEMARKIE AND AVOCH.

FORTROSE is a small market town and representative burgh in the parish of Rosemarkie, 10 miles N. from Inverness, 21 S. from Tain, and 18 N.E. from Beaulieu, situated on the north side of the inner part of the Moray Firth, nearly opposite to Fort George, from which it is distant two miles and a half. Before the abolition of episcopal establishments in Scotland, Fortrose cathedral was the seat of the bishopric of Ross, and this town was likewise the chief seat of learning in this quarter of the kingdom; it was mentioned in history by the title of "the Chanonry of Ross." James II. in 1444 united the town in burghal privileges with the neighbouring village of Rosemarkie, under the name of Fort-Ross, which has since been softened down into Fortrose. But small portions of the ancient cathedral now remain entire; one part of it is used as a courthouse, and another division is a rural place. The town has an excellent harbour, built by the parliamentary commissioners. There has since been erected a jetty, about 250 yards in length, at a cost of £3,000. There has for some time past been in course of construction a branch line of the high and railway commencing at Muir of Ord, and having its terminus at Fortrose; it will be about 18 miles in length, and will have stations at Muirhooby, Avoch, Fortrose, &c. Fortrose enjoys every advantage for sea-bathing; and there is an excellent hotel—the Royal—which affords very good accommodation, and is also a posting establishment. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and nine councillors; and it joins with Inverness, Forres, and Nairn in sending one member to Parliament. The present representative is Gilbert Beith, Esq. Population in 1891, 503.

ROSEMARKIE is comparatively a smaller place than Fortrose, though in point of antiquity it takes the precedence as being a parish town. Between the former place and Fort George there is a regular ferry. The parish church was completed in 1821; it is in the late Gothic style and considered to be a very handsome, well-finished building. Its situation has been happily selected, and its commanding aspect on the coast uniformly attracts the particular notice of strangers. More recently a neat church has been erected at Fortrose for the Free Communion of Scotland, and there is an Episcopal church. The parish of Rosemarkie extends six miles in length, by three in breadth. Its situation is fine and pleasant; the hills both on the north and south are for the most part arable, being in summer covered with verdure, and producing early and abundant crops. The coast all along between Rosemarkie and Cromarty is bold and rocky; it abounds with romantic views and frightful precipices. As the country lies dry and has the benefit of fine sea breezes, the air is pure and salubrious. Fairs are held on the Monday before Beaulieu Fair. The entire parish of Rosemarkie, which embraces an area of 6,075 acres, contained in 1881, a population of 1,357, and in 1891, 1,349; of this number 368 were returned as belonging to the village of Rosemarkie.

AVOCH is a parish 2 miles S.E. from Fortrose, and 7 N. from Inverness. Acreage, 8,030. Population in 1881, 1,691, and in 1891, 1,817.

GAIRLOCH,

WITH THE PARISH OF APPLECROSS, AND THE VILLAGES OF POOLEWE, AULTBAE, KINLOCHEWE, AND SHIELDAIG.

GAIRLOCH parish is about 40 miles in length by 88 in breadth, and abounds in mountains, lochs, heaths, &c. For beauty of scenery and abundance of game of all descriptions it is, perhaps, unsurpassed by any other district in the north. An Established and two Free churches, together with several schools, are in the parish. There is also a branch of the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, at Gairloch. Acreage, 200,646. Population in 1881, 4,594, and in 1891, 4,090.

POOLEWE is a small fishing village in the parish of Gairloch, 64 miles W. from Dingwall, and about the same distance S.E. from Stornoway, situated at the head of a fine bay called Loch Ewe. According to an inventory from the title deeds still in the possession of the Gairloch family, the old name for the village of Poolewe was Clive. It was erected into a burgh of barony in 1619, and a charter of registration in favour of the then proprietor was granted under the great seal, erecting Clive, on the water of Ewe, into a burgh of barony, and the harbour of Ewe into a free port, with power from year to year of electing a provost, bailies, &c.; and not only of keeping burgh courts for the good government of the burgh, and the administration of justice to the inhabitants, and all others concerned, but of creating burgesses, levying the burgh duties, buying and selling merchandise as practised in other burghs in the kingdom, and planting artisans, keeping weights and measures, and levying customs, anchorage, &c. after the manner of other royalities; of having a market cross, a Saturday market each week, and a public market once a year, under the name of Michaelmas market, beginning September 29th and continuing four days. It does not appear that any use was ever made of this charter, as far as Clive was concerned. It is very probable that the proprietor of Gairloch may have desired to introduce trade and commerce into the country, and had planted "artisans" at Poolewe, and obtained this charter to encourage the settling of others. However this may be, Poolewe at the present day has no evidence of the success of such an attempt. The proprietor, John of Gairloch, may have attempted such favourite schemes, but it appears that his successor, Alexander, did not carry them out. John died eleven years after the granting of the charter, and Alexander eight years later, leaving a son, Kenneth, a minor Poolewe is part of the estate of Gairloch, and is a quoad sacra parish; a quoad sacra church and a Free church are the places of worship. In Poolewe and the neighbouring districts are several schools, the one at BALNAULIP being one of the finest erections for educational purposes in any rural parish in the north of Scotland; it was erected and endowed by Francis Harford Mackenzie, Esq., and is now a Board school. The only station on the west coast for curing salmon, grilse and trout, is that at Poolewe, which is here carried on to a great extent. Poolewe is about 2 miles from Loch Maree, which abounds with fish. This lake contains 24 islands; some of these are but little raised above water, and are covered with scattered fire, and with thickets of Birch, alder and holly; while they are separated by narrow sinuous channels. The northern margin of the loch presents a variety of close shore scenery consisting of rocky and wooded bays and creeks, crowned by noble overhanging cliffs and mountains. In one place the remains of a fir forest, in a situation almost incredible, produces a style of landscape that might be exposed among the Alps, but not within the more confined scope and lower arrangements of Scottish mountains. This lake is 18 miles in length, and from 3 to 4 in breadth; one of the islands is called Maree, from which the water takes its name, and tradition says that some noble personages from Norway were buried here. Loch Maree is the property of Sir Kenneth S. McKenzie, Bart., of Gairloch. Into the inner part of Loch Ewe (or Ew, or Eu) pours the river Ewe, which is scarcely 2 miles in length, and is the natural outlet from Loch Maree; the river has a rapid turbulent course, and is noted for the abundance of its salmon. About two centuries ago an extensive iron furnace was in operation near Poolewe, but its fires became extinguished after consuming the greater part of the timber around it. Since the opening of the Dingwall and Skye Railway, there is regular communication by coach from the hotel at ACHNASHEEN station to KINLOCHEWE, GAIRLOCH, POOLEWE and AULTBAE. Two large hotels are on this route, one at LOCH MAREE and another at GAIRLOCH, for the accommodation of tourists. The population of Poolewe is included in that of Gairloch.

APPLECROSS is a parish in the highlands of West Ross, on Applecross bay. Its size is about 15 miles in length, and the same in breadth. The population is chiefly engaged in fishing, but the farmers derive their wealth principally from rearing black cattle and sheep. The greater part of the parish is occupied as a deer forest by Lord Middleton, Lord Lovelace, Duncan Darroch, Esq., and Charles James Murray, Esq. The scenery in some parts of this parish is the finest in Ross-shire. The climate is very moist, torrents of rain being frequent all the year round. There is a good limestone quarry on Applecross Bay. Acreage, 112,895. Population in 1881, 2,389, and in 1891, 8,958.

INVERGORDON,

ROSSKEEN, ALNESS, EVANTON, KILMUIR EASTER, KILTEARN, AND LOGIE EASTER.

INVERGORDON is a thriving seaport town in the parish of Ross-KEEN, county of Ross, 12 miles S.S.W. from Tain, 13 N.E. from Dingwall, and 8 W. by N. from Cromarty, most eligibly seated on the north side of the fine bay of Cromarty, from whence there is a regular ferry to the opposite shore of the Firth. For the accommodation of persons crossing, a small pier was erected in 1821, partly at the expense of the county and partly with the assistance of Government, so that boats could land their passengers at any time of the tide; but the most valuable and important improvement was conferred upon the port through the munificence and public spirit of the late proprietor, R. B. E. McLeod, Esq., of Cadboll, who at his own expense constructed an excellent harbour, in 1838. This for many years, owing to the central position of the place, served for the landing of the sea-borne goods for the eastern and western parts of Ross-shire, as well as for most parts of Sutherlandshire. In 1857 the accommodation was greatly increased by the erection of large wooden piers, extending several feet further into the channel, and which admitted of the steamers plying with Leith, London, &c., coming alongside. The extension, however, of railway communication to the town in 1863, and subsequently further north, has for the present diverted a large proportion of this traffic. The bay is perfectly commodious and safe, and capable of containing a large fleet, with anchorage of the best description, from which vessels never drive, the "Souters of Cromarty" forming a natural mouth to one great harbour. The town has undergone considerable improvement of late years, and its appearance enlivened by the erection in 1861 of a very handsome Free church, capable of accommodating nearly a thousand sitters. The body of it is cruciform in shape, and there is a spire some 140 feet high, much admired for its handsome proportions. There are also some other excellent buildings, amongst which may be mentioned a neat house and offices belonging to the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, also a very neat building belonging to the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, and several shops which for elegance are not surpassed in the north of Scotland. The Town Hall was opened in April, 1871. It is a conspicuous building in the middle of the High street, in the Italian style of architecture, its most important feature being a pediment, with a beautifully sculptured group representing the god Neptune, with the accessories of the "horn of plenty" on one side and aquatic plants on the other. The manufacture of hemp was once carried on in this town with very considerable spirit by two establishments. Nothing is now done in this branch of commerce. The principal public work is at present a bone crushing and manure manufacturing establishment, carried on in a set of buildings covering over an acre of ground, and giving employment to a number of work-people. There are several comfortable inns, the principal one, the Commercial, in High street, affording the best accommodation to tourists and travellers, is an excellent house. A justice of peace court is held when necessary, and a sheriff court quarterly. In 1864 the town was taken under the provisions of Provost Lindsay's Police Act. About one mile from the town is Invergordon Castle, where are some fine plantations. In November, 1801, the centre of the edifice was accidentally destroyed by fire, but in 1873-4 a very elegant structure was erected on the old site. It is in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and is much admired for its noble appearance. The parish of Rosskeen extends six miles along the Firth of Cromarty and ten inland. The parish of Alness lies on the west, and Logie on the east. The lower part of the parish, which runs along the Firth, and for about two miles back, forms a gentle and easy access to the hills. A hill called Knock-Navie, or Coldhill, divides the lower from the higher part of the parish. Beyond the upper arable ground and inhabited glens is a very considerable range of mountains, applicable to no other purpose than that of pasturing black cattle or sheep. Like the adjacent parts of the shire, the parish has been greatly improved in agricultural capabilities, and now possesses some fine plantations, the chief of these belonging to Invergordon Castle, before mentioned. The town was supplied with gas in 1872. Fairs are held the third Tuesday in April, the first Tuesday in August, the second Tuesday in October, and the third Tuesday in December. In 1881 the parish of Rosskeen, which covers an area of 33,725 acres, had a population of 8,773, and in 1891, 3,490; of this number 1,092 were returned for Invergordon.

KILMUIR EASTER is a parish, 5 miles S. from Tain, and on the west side of Cromarty Firth. Its size is about ten miles in length by four in breadth. An Established and a Free church are the places of worship. Delny is the nearest railway station half a mile distant. Acreage, 10,999. Population in 1881, 1,146, and in 1891, 1,024.

KILTEARN is a parish, 6 miles N.E. of Dingwall, situated on Cromarty Firth, the nearest railway station being at Novar, about a quarter of a mile distant. It is a large parish, being twenty miles in length, by a breadth of about six miles. An Established and a Free church are in the parish, which has an area of 27,972 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,182, and in 1891, 1,301.

ALNESS is a small village, partly in the parish of its name and partly in that of Rosskeen, 3 miles S.W. from Invergordon, situated on both sides of the Alness (which river separates the two parishes), and on the north side of Cromarty bay. The church is about half a mile from the village. The distillation of whisky is carried on extensively in this district by two large establishments. The following fairs are held in Alness:—On the second Tuesday in June, Wednesday before the third Thursday in July, and Wednesday after the third Tuesday in September. The parish of Alness embraces an area of 44,041 acre, and in 1881 had a population of 1,033, and in 1891, 1,039.

EVANTON is a rural village, about 7 miles S.W. from Invergordon, and 4 in the like direction from Alness, situate, like the two latter places, on the north side of Cromarty Bay, and sheltered by a row of trees which defend it from the sea breeze. The church is about a mile distant. About two miles to the westward is FOWLS-FERRY, used for loading grain, timber and cattle, and a mile north-east of the village is a deep ravine called "Aufgraede," supposed to have been formed at some very early period by a mighty convulsion of nature. Fairs are held in this village on the first Tuesday in June and December. The nearest railway station is at Novar, three-quarters of a mile distant. Population in 1881, 486, and in 1891, 417.

LOGIE EASTER is a small parish, seven miles in length and two in breadth, situated in a fine hollow on the Balmagown river. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church. Kildary is the nearest railway station, a quarter of a mile distant. Acreage, 9,978. Population in 1881, 827, and in 1891, 870.

STORNOWAY (ISLAND OF LEWIS),

BARVAS, LOCHS, AND UIG.

STORNOWAY is a parish in the ISLAND OF LEWIS, county of Ross. The town, which has greatly increased in importance of late years, is 85 miles N. from Portree (in Skye), and 40 from Port-Lewis, described on a preceding page. It is situated in north latitude 58 deg. 7 min., and in west longitude 6 deg. 14 min. 10 sec., at the head of a fine bay, called Loch Stornoway, considered one of the safest and most commodious harbours in the north, or even Great Britain. The entrance to it is north and north by west, and it easy of access to vessels of all burthen at any time of the tide. A lighthouse stands on Arinish point, on the south side of the harbour, erected by the Commissioners of Northern Lights, and one has also been built on the Butt of Lewis by the same body. The town is built round the bay, in form of an amphitheatre, and the streets run in direct lines. The houses are neat and well built, and being in general whitewashed, have a clean appearance. A most convenient quay, with slips and landing places, has been constructed. A substantial wall has since been erected round the basin of the harbour. The stranger on entering the bay is forcibly struck with the imposing and magnificent appearance of Lewis Castle, in the Tudor and castellated style of architecture. It occupies a commanding position west of the town, and was erected by its late proprietor, Sir James Matheson, at an outlay of £60,000. It is surrounded by tastefully laid out grounds, and there is also a conservatory, with a colonnade communicating with the castle. The town, too, as seen on entering the bay, presents a pleasing aspect. From small origin, Stornoway has gradually risen to considerable importance, through the spirit and enterprise of its inhabitants. The Island of Lewis, or Lews, next to Ireland, is the largest of the British Isles, being 45 miles in length, 15 in average breadth, and 30 in extreme breadth. It was acquired by the late Sir Jas. Matheson Bart., of Achany, in 1844, from the representatives of the late Earl of Seaforth, for the sum of £190,000. Among the improvements accomplished may be mentioned the draining of thousands of acres of moor or waste land, planting several hundred acres with timber trees, whilst immediately surrounding the castle, pleasure grounds and walks have been tastefully laid out, and drives formed. In Stornoway a patent slip was constructed at a cost of £7,000, which will draw up vessels of 800 tons burthen into dock for the purpose of making repairs—a great advantage to the shipowners of Stornoway and others visiting the port. The white fishery, consisting of cod and ling, has been long and successfully prosecuted in these waters, besides which the salmon fishery is very productive. The months of May, June, and July are the season for herring fishing, when it is estimated that close upon 1,000 boats with a complement of five hands to each boat, are employed throughout the island; and during this period more than 40,000 tons of fish have been exported, consisting chiefly of cod, ling, and herring. The ling and cod are caught during the winter and spring months, and are dried and sent to the Glasgow and Liverpool markets, and as many as 60,000 and 70,000 barrels of herrings have been forwarded in one year chiefly to the Hamburg, Stettin, and St. Petersburg markets. The herring fishing of late years has been prosecuted with considerable success, the number of boats has increased, and the boats used have been improved. Many steamers are employed in carrying the fish to the nearest railway stations at Strone Ferry and Oban, and to Fleetwood and other ports. At Stornoway a large quantity is prepared in a kippered state, and exported principally to the English markets, there being several establishments in full operation. The streets of the burgh are well lighted with gas, the works having been erected in 1848. The monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, British Linen Co. Bank, and Caledonian Banking Co. Limited, which have been established in this distant quarter for many years. There are likewise agents for Lloyd's, and for several insurance companies, and three excellent hotels, the Lewis, the Royal, and the Imperial, may be considered as exceedingly eligible establishments for families and commercial gentlemen. Stornoway was erected into a burgh of barony by James VI. with the design of promoting the civilization of the Western Isles; it has adopted the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act 1862. A sheriff court sits every Wednesday during the session for ordinary and small debt business, and justice of peace, commissary and criminal courts are held as occasion may require. Stornoway possesses several educational, religious, and social institutions. The Nicholson Institution, situated off James street, was endowed by the late Sir James Matheson with a salary of £35 annually for the teacher. The same gentleman also contributed the site for the building and playgrounds free of charge. The Free Church School is conducted upon the plan of the Normal Seminary; there is also a school for females, instituted and endowed by the late proprietor and his lady, affording a thorough English education to the numerous pupils. There are a number of societies for mutual improvement, including the Young Men's and the Free Church Young Men's Christian Associations. There is also a public library and reading room; to the latter strangers are admitted free upon the recommendation of a member. The Horticultural Society holds public competitions in flowers and vegetables in July and October. The edifice erected for the service of a masonic lodge is a handsome structure; in it are occasionally held assemblies, concerts and public meetings; in the same building is a public library. The parish of Stornoway lies on the north-east of Lewis Island, bounded on the inland side by Barvas. It extends 19 miles in length, by from 4 to 7 in breadth. The surface is generally flat and moorish, the shores partly sand and partly rock, and indented by a number of bays. Steamers, handsomely fitted up for passengers, fly frequently between Glasgow and Stornoway, besides those which call at Stornoway weekly.

The most remarkable ancient remains in the Island of Lewis are the Druidical standing stones or Temple of Callanish; they are 43 in number, arranged in a cruciform manner, with a circle at the intersection from which the wings radiate, and extend north and south 600 feet with the line corresponding with the long leg of the cross. The late proprietor enclosed the circle with a neat wire fence, and the ground about it is cleared. On a lower eminence, half a mile from the Callanish temple, there is another cluster of standing stones. Throughout the island there are various specimens, single and in fairs, of these standing obelisks, probably erected as memorial, and there is a cave at Gress, 200 feet in length, which is comparatively unknown to the inhabitants.

At MEALISTA URG, not far from the shrine of St. Catan, are the remains of a nunnery which has found no name in history, but is still designated by a Gaelic name commemorative of the abode of the sable sisterhood. At a little distance from this locality there were discovered some years ago upwards of 60 ebony figures, beautifully executed, and from their costume evidently of very ancient manufacture; they were about 4 inches long, partly stained of a beetroot colour, and from their variety in form and shape were probably designed as chessmen. The population of the whole of the Island of Lewis was in 1881, 25,415; of this number 10,523 belonged to the parish of Stornoway; in 1891 the numbers were 27,496 and 11,710 respectively.

STROME FERRY,

WITH LOCHCARRON (WITH VILLAGE OF JEANTOWN), KINTAIL (WITH VILLAGE OF DORNIE), LOCHALSH (WITH VILLAGE OF PLOCKTON), AND GLENSHIEL.

STROME FERRY, in the parish of Lochalsh, has recently sprung into prominence through being the terminus of the Dingwall and Skye Railway, and the most direct route to Portree, to which place steamers ply regularly, and from thence there is communication by MacBrayne's steamers with Stornoway, Glasgow, &c. There is a first-class hotel here, at which tourists and others will find suitable accommodation. The Established church is a neat stone building, erected in 1890, at a cost of £650, raised by public subscription.

KINTAIL parish is bounded on the north and west by Lochalsh, on the south by Glenshiel, and on the east by Kilmorack. It is altogether a very mountainous district. In the village of DORNIE, in this parish, has been erected through the munificence of the late Duchess of Leeds, a beautiful Roman Catholic chapel, with schools attached. Acreage, 77,441. Population in 1881, 688, and in 1891, 630.

GLENSHIEL is a parish near Loch Duich. In size it is 16 miles in length, by a breadth of two miles. Loch Duich is one of the finest sea lochs in Scotland. Acreage, 57,320. Population in 1881, 424, and in 1891, 394.

LOCHCARRON is a parish on Loch Carron, its size being 14 miles in length, and its breadth five miles. The principal village is JEANTOWN, near the head of the loch, and about three miles from the railway station at STRATHCARRON, on the Dingwall and Skye railway. It has a good hotel and a branch of the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited. Acreage, 81,488. In 1881 the population was 1,456, and in 1891, 1,890.

LOCHALSH is a parish 10 miles s.w. of Lochcarron. It is a large parish, being 23 miles in length and eight in breadth, abounding in red deer, game, &c. There are three good hotels—one at ACHNASHEEN station, affording every accommodation to tourists; one at STRATHCARRON station, and one at BALMACARRA. Near PLOCKTON, which is about four miles from Strome, is Duncraig Castle, one of the seats of Sir Kenneth J. Matheson, Bart., of Ardross, the proprietor of the parish. A branch of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, is established at Balmacarra. Acreage, 49,532. This parish in 1881 possessed a population of 2,050, and in 1891, 1,638.

TAIN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF EDDERTON, FEARN, KINCARDINE, NIGG AND TARBAT, AND THE VILLAGES OF ARDGY AND PORTMAHOMACK.

TAIN is a parish, a royal burgh, and a market town, 46 miles N.
from Inverness, and 26 N. by E. from Dingwall, occupying a gentle acclivity about a mile from the Firth of Dornoch, across which arm of the sea several ferries are established. The ancient Gaelic name of the town is Baldnei, signifying "the town of St.
Duthac" (or Duthus), to whom the old church and chapel in the parish had been dedicated. The old chapel of St. Duthus, standing below the town near the railway station, was built about 1200;
to it Robert the Bruce's queen and her retinue fled for refuge, but were taken captive by the Earl of Ross, and delivered up to the English. The church, which was founded by Thomas, Bishop of Ross, in 1428, is an elegant structure, and was used as a parish church until 1815, but was afterwards left unprotected and ruinous for upwards of 40 years, when its restoration by public subscription was undertaken and conducted until 1877 by Mr. John M'Leod, then provost of Tain, and thereafter by his son, George M'Leod, until 1882. It contains some beautiful stained glass windows to the memory of families in the district, and monuments to Thomas Hogg and Patrick Hamilton, the Scottish martyrs. St. Duthac seems to have been a saint who enjoyed a considerable reputation in Scotland in the 15th century, as records state that James IV.
once made a pilgrimage on foot from Falkland, in Fife, to his shrine at the church of Tain, for the expiation of some offence.
He travelled with unusual expedition, resting only a short time by the way at the monastery of Pluscardine, and on his arrival bestowed upon the town of Tain extensive grants of land, with other immunities. The inhabitants, hearing of his approach, constructed a hasty roadway over a peat moss, within a few miles of the town, which is still called "the King's Causeway." A rich agricultural district surrounds the town, which is old and irregularly built, but of late years has received improvements and additions by the erection of many good houses and buildings for public use. Among the latter is the Court House, surmounted by pinnacles, and presenting a handsome appearance; a large hall for assemblies and public meetings, a very handsome hotel (the Royal), the churches, and the Royal Academy. The last-named, which is agreeably situated in an open park at the west end of the town, and is a superior educational institution, was founded by royal charter in 1809, and opened in 1812, the cost of its erection having been raised by subscription. The course of education is conducted by a rector with a classical master and assistants. The Court House, previous to 1833, was used as a place of confinement for debtors; in April of that year it was destroyed by fire, when three persons perished in the flames; the present Court House is erected on its site. The trade of Tain is of the usual character found in country towns. The most prominent branches are distilling, which is carried on extensively by the Glenmorangie Distillery Company, Limited, whose premises have recently been enlarged, and woollen manufacturing. There are four banking houses and a savings bank established here, branches respectively

of the British Linen Company, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, and North of Scotland Bank, Limited. As a royal burgh, it is governed by a provost, three baillies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and nine councillors; and unites with Cromarty and other contributory burghs (named under that town) in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being Sir John Pender. A sheriff small debt court is held in Tain every Wednesday during session, and a justice of peace court every Thursday fortnight.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church—a handsome building erected in 1832 at a cost of £5,200, and superseding an earlier one—a United Presbyterian church, and an Episcopal church. The first-mentioned edifice is of considerable dimensions—in form quadrangular, with a castellated tower at each corner, which, not rising above the main body of the building, renders the general appearance of the whole more massive than elegant. The parish of Tain extends 8 miles along the south shore of the Dornoch Firth, by a breadth of 4 miles inland. The ground in general is flat, but towards the west is rather hilly. The district is tolerably well wooded, much improved by agricultural operations, and, upon the whole, of a pleasing appearance. The sea shore is flat and sandy. The Highland railway passes through Tain, and has a station here. The principal markets are held on the Wednesday after the second Tuesday in July, on the Wednesday after the third Tuesday in August, and on the third Tuesday in October; and corn markets are held every other Friday. In 1881 the parish of Tain, which covers an area of 16,673 acres, had a population of 3,009, and in 1891, 2,814; of this number the town possessed 2,080.

PORTMAHOMACK is a small seaport and fishing village in the parish of TARBAT, 10 miles E. from Tain, situated on the north coast. The parish is 7½ miles long and 4½ wide. Its form is generally peninsular, and gradually diminishes in width until it terminates in a point at Tarbat Ness, which divides the Dornoch and Moray Firths, and on which there is a lighthouse, with a revolving light. The parish of Tarbat embraces an area of 6,787 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,878, and in 1891, 1,705, of which 259 belonged to Portmahomack.

FEARN is a parish, bounded on the north by Tain, on the west by Loxie, and the south by Nigg. The village of Fearn is 5 miles S.W. from Tain. Length and breadth of the parish, each about 2 miles. Loch Eyo, a fine sheet of water, is in this parish. There are an Establishment and a Free church, and several public schools in the parish. The Highland Railway Company has a station here. Acreage, 7,841. Population in 1881, 2,135, and in 1891, 1,960.

EDDERTON is a parish, bounded on the north by Kincardine, on the south by Tain, on the east by the Firth of Dornoch, and on the west by Kilmuir. It is 9 miles long and 4 miles broad. The distillation of whisky is carried on extensively in this parish. Acreage, 22,120. In 1881, Edderton had a population of 789, and in 1891, 642.

NIGG is a parish, north of Cromarty, and separated from it by the opening of the Cromarty Firth, having a length of 6 miles with a breadth of from 2 to 3. A third of the parish consists of its most interesting physical feature, the Hill of Nigg, rising to a height of 500 feet. From the highest point nine counties may be seen by the naked eye. Nigg includes the fishing villages of SHANDWICK and BALNABREACH. The parish of Nigg has an area of 7,818 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,060 and in 1891, 930.

ARDGAY is a village in the parish of KINCARDINE, and one mile from Bonar Bridge, which is its nearest railway station, situated on the north border of Ross-shire. It has a common bus inn, called the Bainsgown Arms, where every comfort will be found. A deed was granted in the year 1686 to erect the village into a burgh of barony but this was never carried into effect. Kincardine parish has an area of 153,054 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,472 and in 1891, 1,417.

ULLAPOOL,

LOCHBROOM AND COIGACH.

ULLAPOOL is a seaport and fishing village in the parish of Lochbroom, 61 miles w. by s. from Inverness, 50 n.w.n. by w. from Dingwall, and 80 n.e. from Poolewe, situated on the west coast of Ross-shire, on the north side of an extensive inlet of the sea, called Loch Broom, and is overhung by a long rugged precipitous face of rock. It was begun to be built under the auspices of the British Fishery Society in 1788, and has been gradually increasing since that period. It possesses a spacious and excellent harbour, and there is a good quay for the use of vessels. Steamers sail regularly to Stornoway, in Lewis, and to Glasgow. In Ullapool very handsome hotels have been erected, and there is also a branch of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The nearest railway station at present is Garve, on the Dingwall and Skye railway. The chief trade of the place is the herring fishery, which is the main dependence of its inhabitants. Prodigious shoals of this fish appear on the coast of Loch Broom as early as May, but they pass on towards the south, and do not strike into the lochs and arms of the sea as to be of benefit to the inhabitants until the month of September, when their appearance is anxiously looked for, great preparations made, and considerable expense incurred by the poor people to profit by their expected bounty. When the shoals set fairly in, and remain in the lochs and bays, the number taken is very great, and of the very best quality. Ullapool, in the season, is attended from all parts of the east and west coast, and even from Ireland, by curers, and during this period the place presents a very animated appearance. The want of good roads in this district has been an inconvenience long felt by the inhabitants of the circumjacent country. The late Hugh Mackenzie, Esq., of Ardross and Dundonnell, opened up new roads in various directions. Ullapool is the property of the heirs of the late Sir James Matheson, Bart., who conferred great benefits on Stornoway and other parts of Lewis, by his spirited and costly improvements in roads, &c. Ullapool is crowded in summer by sportsmen from all parts to enjoy the fishing and shooting. There is a small grouse shooting box attached to the hotels, which has added to the many attractions already in the village, and visitors have the privilege of free trout fishing on the river Ullapool. The parish church is situated at the head of Loch Brann, and was built in 1814. There is a quoad sacra church with a district attached. A Free church is also situated in the village. A justice of peace court for the recovery of small debts is held occasionally in the village. In 1881 the parish of Lochbroom, which has an area of 261,021 acres, possessed a population of 4,191, and in 1891 4,000; of this number 959 belonged to Ullapool.

ROXBURGHSHIRE.

THIS county, which lies on the south-eastern border of Scotland, is bounded by Northumberland on the east, Dumfries-shire on the south-west, by the county of Selkirk on the west, by Berwickshire on the north and by Northumberland and part of Cumberland on the south. The figure of the county is extremely irregular; it measures from its extreme point on the south to that part which is interbed between the counties of Berwick and Edinburgh upwards of forty miles; and from east to west, near the centre, about thirty miles. The area of the shire contains 665 square miles, or 425,657 acres, about one half of which is brought into cultivation. The county is divided by its waters into several districts, of which the chief and largest is Teviotdale, being that division drained by the Teviot and its tributary streams; this district comprehends about 500 square miles. Liddesdale, which forms the south-west corner of the county, comprehends the Alpine territory, which is drained by the Liddle and its tributaries, and contains 120 square miles. The third division lies between the Gala and Leader streams, measuring 26 square miles; and the fourth, which is situate north of the Tweed, is included in "the Merse," and comprehends 27 square miles. In size Roxburgh is the fourteenth, and in population the seventeenth of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY, &c.—At the time of the Christian epoch, the western and greater part of Roxburghshire was inhabited by the Gadenii, while the eastern and lesser districts were occupied by the Ottadini, who had numerous strongholds in the shire, ruins and traces of which are still visible. The district is also intersected by Roman roads in various directions, and the whole shire presents a field of the greatest interest to the antiquarian and the historian. There is another class of antiquities belonging to the county worthy of notice and inspection—these are towers or castles; among them are the castle of Jedburgh, that of Roxburgh, Hermitage Castle (in Liddesdale), and other similar structures of minor celebrity. The district was likewise famed for its religious edifices, which included the abbeys of Jedburgh, Melrose, and Kelso. From its situation on the confines of the two kingdoms, Roxburghshire suffered severely throughout the various border wars; and few were so distinguished in the conflicts of the middle ages as the "men of Teviotdale," many of whom followed David, in 1123, to "the Battle of the Standard," in which they fought by his side and shared his misfortune. During these fierce aggressions the marches of the kingdom were at different periods contracted and extended (this district being occasionally wholly or partly under English domination), till the year 1367, when the borders were finally settled as they then happened to lie; and by this arrangement Roxburghshire was for ever attached to Scotland.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The southern parts of Roxburghshire are very mountainous, and throughout the whole territory there is little land absolutely flat; in many instances, however, the hilly grounds rise in beautiful swells from the rich valleys at their base; the aspect of the country is thus finely diversified in respect to surface and elevation, while the beauty of the district is greatly enhanced by the clear rivers and brooks which flow through the different vales. The following are the principal mountains and eminences, with their respective altitudes above the level of the sea:—Cheviot, 2,682 feet; Anchopecairn, 2,382; Chill Hill, Millenwood Fells and Windhead Fells, each 2,000; Tudhope Fell, 1,830; Carter Fell, 1,602; Meggs Hill, 1,480; Ruberslaw, 1,392; Eildon Hills, 1,330; Dunnian, 1,021; Minto Hills, 858; and Minto Craigs, 649. The soil of the county is various, and much of it exceedingly fertile; in some parts a rich loam prevails, in others, gravel and clay in various proportions; the heavy clayey soil occupying the higher grounds, while the valued loam is generally found on low and level tracts, near the beds of rivers and rivulets. In Liddesdale there is much mossy land; but for a county so mountainous, the proportion of heath and moss is inconsiderable. It has been ascertained that so early as the twelfth century the district produced great quantities of corn, and the amount of barley then ground at the mills exhibited the progress made in this branch of commerce. Under the intelligent monks the agriculture of the county arrived at considerable perfection; and it is a matter of certainty that they introduced the knowledge of horticulture. Apples, and pears are now extensively cultivated in the orchards of Melrose, Jedburgh and Kelso. In later times Roxburghshire has kept pace with the other counties in those extraordinary improvements in the management of the soil, and excellent crops of wheat, barley, and oats are now grown, as are also potatoes, peas, beans, and turnips, the latter considered to be the most remunerative to the farmer, as they serve the purpose of food for the great numbers of sheep and cattle that are reared, and for the disposal of which large stock sales are held at Hawick, Kelso and Newtown St. Boswell's, which are attended by buyers from all parts of the United Kingdom. The mineralogy of the shire is neither valuable nor varied. Between the years 1700 and 1770 coal was discovered in the hill called Carter Fell, in this county, near the borders of Northumberland; but though wrought for some time it was ultimately abandoned as unprofitable; another seam was subsequently found near the south-eastern portion of Liddesdale, from which little benefit has been derived beyond that detached district. Various attempts have been made to find coal in different places in the county, but not one of them was conducted on a scale adequate to the importance of the object, and the inhabitants are still supplied with this valuable mineral from Dumfries-shire, Lothian, or Northumberland. The manufactures of Roxburghshire do not vary much. If a staple of the county may be particularised it is that of articles made from wool, the seats of which are at Hawick, Jedburgh, and Kelso, where flannels, blankets, tartans, woollen cloth, lambs' wool yarn, and hosiery are extensively manufactured. The salmon fisheries of the Tweed are of consequence, and yield handsome rents to the proprietors. The county contains many elegant mansions and beautiful seats, one of the most interesting of these is Abbotsford, the seat of the late eminent novelist, Sir Walter Scott; it is a fine Gothic castle, the internal and external decorations of which characterise it as having been the residence of the poet, the antiquary and the man of superior and refined taste. But not to the mansion was the cultivated taste and judgment of the poet confined. He covered his extensive property with the most skillfully disposed and thriving plantations, and by his improvements induced others to contribute to ornament that beautiful portion of the valley of the Tweed.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The principal streams of Roxburghshire are beautiful and interesting, and their tributaries numerous. The noble Tweed enters the county near the influx of the Ettrick, winds through the fertile vales of Melrose and Kelso, and in a course of thirty miles receives the Gala, the Allan, the Leader, the Teviot, and the Eden. The Teviot, which falls into the Tweed nearly opposite to Kelso, is a lovely river; it passes through a vale to which it gives name, and in a course of from thirty to forty miles receives the Borthwick, the Ale, the Slitterick, the Rule, the Jed, the Oxnam, and the Kealie waters, with many subsidiary streamlets. The Liddle rises in and runs through the parish of Castletown; it gives the name of Liddesdale to a division of the county, and for a distance of four or five miles forms the boundary with England. The streams tributary to the Liddle are the Hermitage, the Tweeden, the Tennis, the Kershope, and the Blackburn. The Tyne and Coquet rivers have their origin in this county, after which they enter England, and fall into the sea at Tynemouth and Coquet Isle. The lochs are small and few in number, the principal being Yetholm Loch, about a mile and a half in circumference. The waters of Roxburghshire, while useful and ornamental to the country through which they glide, possess considerable interest to both the antiquary and the poet, from the associations connected with their streams; for besides being frequently mentioned in the pages of history, they have elicited laudatory strains from the Scottish lyrists, among the rest those of the author of "The Seasons." The principal railway line in connection with this county is the North British, with its several branches.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—The county of Roxburgh comprises thirty entire parishes and five parts of parishes; it contains only one royal burgh—Jedburgh—which previous to the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Lauder, in returning a member to Parliament, but was then merged in the county. The present member for the county is the Hon. Mark F. Napier. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 numbered (including Jedburgh), 6,015. The Lord-Lieutenant is the Duke of Roxburghe. In 1881 the population was returned as 58,442, and in 1891, 58,726; an increase in the ten years of 284. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was £355,358, including railways.

ANCRUM AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

ANCRUM is a small village in the united parish of ANCRUM and LONGNEWTON, 11 miles S.W. from Kelso, 11 N.E. from Hawick, and 4 S.W. from Jedburgh; pleasantly situated on the right bank of the water of Ale, about a mile above its junction with the Teviot, and about three miles from the Hawick branch of the North British Railway. Ancrum House, the residence of Sir William M. Scott, Bart., stands in a delightful position, and commands some beautiful picturesque prospects; the trees in the park are considered the oldest and finest in this part of the country. At a short distance east of the village stood Ancrum Castle; opposite to which in the face of a perpendicular rock, are some caves, supposed to have been places of retreat in the troubles of former ages. In the early part of the last century the banks of the Teviot and Ale, at this spot, were the favourite haunt of Thomson, author of "The Seasons;" one of the caves just mentioned is still pointed out, in which, it is said, he frequently retired to indulge in his reveries, and on that account is called "Thomson's Cave;" his name is carved on the roof by, it is supposed, his own hand. Dr. Buchan, the celebrated author of "Domestic Medicine," and other medical works, was born in this village. The parish stretches six miles along the north side of the river Teviot, and its breadth is about four miles. A part of the Roman road that led from York to the banks of the Forth passes through the north corner of the parish, and the remains of a Roman encampment are discernible. The population of the parish in 1891 was 1,241, acreage, 10,295. The nearest railway station is Jedfoot Bridge, 2½ miles distant.

DENHOLM,

WITH THE PARISH OF CAVERS.

DENHOLM is a small village in the parish of CAVERS, 5 miles S.W. from Jedburgh, and the same distance N.E. from Hawick, pleasantly situated on a small plateau, shelving abruptly to the right bank of the Teviot, which is here crossed by a neat stone bridge erected in 1861. Leading up towards the hills from a "holm," or a meadow is a richly wooded "dene," or ravine, which presents a series of romantic views, and from which Denholm takes its name. The village was much improved some years since, at a considerable expense, by the late James Douglas, Esq., of Cavers. The greater proportion of the inhabitants are engaged in rural pursuits. This parish contains an Established church, a Free church, a chapel for Independents, and two public schools. There is a subscription library in the village, and a horticultural society was formed in 1849. The celebrated Dr. Leyden was born here, and a monument has been erected to his memory in the centre of the village green. The upper part of the district is hilly and pastoral, while the lower, which is in a fine state of cultivation, declines into rich arable fields. In 1881 the population of Denholm was 692, and in 1891, 579.

CAVERS is a parish of very irregular figure, and of considerable extent, and consists of two detached portions on the southern side of the Teviot. The upper portion is separated from the lower one by Hawick and Kirkcaldy parishes. Cavers contains 18,254 acres, and in 1831 the population numbered 1,818, and in 1891, 842.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY.

HASSENDEAN Station, on the North British line, is one mile and three quarters from Denholm—George Watson, station master

HAWICK,

HOBKIRK, KIRKTON, MINTO, ROBERTON, TEVIOT HEAD, AND WILTON.

HAWICK is a thriving manufacturing town, a free burgh of barony, and capital of its parish, 50 miles S. by E. from Edinburgh, 20 S.W. from Kelso, 11 S. from Selkirk, and 45 N. from Carlisle, situated on the high road between the last-named city and Edinburgh, on the Waverley route of the North British railway, for which there is a station not far from the centre of the town. It gives name to a parliamentary group of towns—the Hawick burghs—of which it is the most important, represented at present by Thomas Shaw, Esq. It is seated at the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot rivers. By the former stream the town is divided into two nearly equal parts, which are connected by three stone bridges. The village of WILTON, on the north bank of the Teviot, is now included in the burgh boundaries, the river being spanned by two stone bridges, one re-erected in 1865, and several foot bridges. From its approximate position to the border of the two kingdoms, Hawick generally suffered severely from the incursions of the English, and was more than once burnt. One of its most destructive conflagrations occurred in 1570, when it was set fire to by the English under Lord Sussex. The present town consists chiefly of one long line of streets, from which other thoroughfares diverge on the right bank of the Teviot; and on the left, or Wilton, bank of the river, of another continuous line of streets and minor thoroughfares extending from it. The town is generally well paved and lighted; the water supply, for many years defective, was in 1865 considerably increased by the introduction of the stream of the Allan, a mountain burn which joins the Teviot five miles above the town, and this was supplemented in 1881 by a new supply from Dodburn in the same locality. The water is excellent in quality, and in quantity is amply sufficient for the requirements of the population. These water schemes cost about £20,000. A thorough system of drainage has, since the introduction of the water, been carried out. The public buildings are the Town Hall, Temperance Hall, Cottage Hospital, and the Exchange; the latter is a large and handsome building, erected in 1865. The Town Hall and Municipal Buildings were rebuilt in 1885, at a cost of £15,000; this includes Free Library and Reading Room, the Free Libraries Act having been adopted here in 1878. The Buccleuch Memorial, erected by public subscription at a cost of about £5,000, to commemorate the friendly relationship which has always existed between the town and the house of Buccleuch, consists of a Science and Art Institute and Museum. The estate known as Wilton Lodge was purchased by the town council and laid out as a public park at a cost of £14,000; it was opened in May, 1890. The environs of Hawick are much admired by strangers; but the improvement of the neighbourhood has been retarded by the territory being held under strict entail, which prevents gentlemen of fortune from settling in this part of the country and embellishing its natural loveliness. The banks of the Teviot are extremely picturesque and delightful, and the approach to the town from the south can be scarcely surpassed for beauty. The great increase of manufacturing establishments, together with the erection of extensive mills, and the enlargement of others, have conduced to the increase of the population, and the consequent augmentation of buildings. Some of the residences of the manufacturers are on a scale which quite outstrip the mansions of the country gentry. Hawick is a burgh of barony, independent of the lord of erection, and appears to have existed free from a very early period; but the documents of the burgh having been either lost or destroyed during the incursions of the English borderers, a charter was granted in the year 1545, by James Douglas, Comte de Drumlanrig, confirming to the burgesses such rights and lands as they formerly possessed; and in the month of May of the same year this was confirmed by another charter, granted by Queen Mary. Under these grants the burgesses annually elected their magistrates, consisting of two bailies, and two representatives of each of seven incorporated trades, who, with fifteen councillors (elected for life), managed all the municipal affairs of the town. In 1861, the inhabitants, with the concurrence of the existing town council, made application to Parliament for a reform of the municipal constitution, and the result was an Act which considerably extended the burgh boundaries, and provided that the councillors should be elected as in royal burghs, and have the whole management of the town property. The town is divided into five wards, each of which returns three councillors, who retire by rotation. The council elect a provost, two bailies, a treasurer and town clerk, and, besides acting as custodians of the burgh property, exercise all the functions of commissioners of police. The provost and bailies are justices of the peace during their tenure of office. An efficient police force is established, and a court for petty offences is held daily; the justice of peace court being held on the third Thursday of the month. Hawick is noted for its great annual festival known as "the common riding," which has been regularly celebrated without intermission for at least three centuries. It originated, according to tradition, from the circumstance of some young men of the town having, in the year after the battle of Flodden (1514), surprised a party of marauding English during the night, about two miles below the town, and, after slaying the greater part of them, took possession of their colour. A fac-simile of this colour or ensign is now borne by an unmarried male of the burgh, elected for the occasion, and dubbed with the title of "cornet," who accompanies the authorities in procession round the lands belonging to the town, of which a grant was made from the Laird of Drumlanrig, as a reward for the valour displayed in obtaining the standard. This is one of the most considerable manufacturing and trading towns in the south of Scotland. There are two branches of the woollen manufacture—hosiery and Scotch tweeds, and for the production of both the town enjoys a fair reputation. Four banking agencies are settled here, namely the British Linen Company Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland.

The commerce and general trade of the place has received great benefit from the facility of communication from distant parts by railway transit. One of the principal hotels here, called The Tower, situated in the Market place, was a fortress, belonging to the superior of the burgh, and the only building not destroyed by the forces of Sussex. At a more recent period it was the frequent residence of the celebrated Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth. There are places of worship of the Establishment, the Free church, and for various religious denominations—a list of these with their officiating ministers, being given on a subsequent page. The establishment of several institutions evinces a taste for literary pursuits and useful knowledge; amongst these being a circulating library and public reading room, liberally furnished with London and provincial papers. There is also a flourishing Archaeological Society, with which is connected a museum, rich in memorials of the ancient history of the border, and other antiquarian relics and curiosities. A continuation porchouse was erected in 1857, at a cost of £4,000; it will accommodate about 190 inmates. A farmers' club, or agricultural society, was formed here in 1776. Another club of the same kind, "The Teviotdale," was established in 1859. There is also the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, established in 1885, which has an annual exhibition of live stock. The market is held on Thursday, and there are auction sales of stock every Monday, and at the special sales during the summer as many as 200,000 to 250,000 lambs occasionally pass under the hammer. The fairs are held on the 17th of May, the 21st of September, and the 8th of November; any of these days happening on Saturday, Sunday or Monday the fair is held on the following Tuesday. A tryst is likewise held in October, at which horses and cattle are exposed for sale; and there is a wool fair held on the first Thursday after St. Boswell's fair in July. Hawick parish comprises an area of 5,112 acres. The town of Hawick with Wilton contained in 1881 a population numbering 16,184, which in 1891 had increased to 19,204.

HOBKIRK, or HOPEKIRK, is a mountainous parish, 7 miles S.E. from Hawick, 11 miles long and about one and a half in breadth; it adjoins the parishes of Cavers, Bedrule, Southdean, Castleton and Kirkton. Acreage, 16,193. Population in 1881, 681, and in 1891, 651.

KIRKTON is a parish, three miles S.E. from Hawick, about eight miles long and about one and a half broad, adjoining Cavers, Hobkirk and Hawick. Acreage, 6,202. Population in 1881, 534, and in 1891, 324.

MINTO is a parish, five miles N.E. from Hawick, about five and a half miles long, and its greatest breadth about three miles; bounded by Lilliesleaf, Ancrum, Bedrule, Cavers, Wilton, and the county of Selkirk. Acreage, 5,602. Population in 1881, 435, and in 1891, 430.

ROBERTON is a parish, five miles W. from Hawick, partly in Roxburghshire, and partly in Selkirkshire, bounded by Yarrow, Selkirk, Ashkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Dumfriesshire and Ettrick. It is 18 miles long and about five broad, and is very mountainous. Acreage, 29,419. Population in 1881, 567, and in 1891, 556.

WILTON is a parish adjoining Hawick; the greater portion of its houses, factories, &c., form a portion of the town of Hawick, and nearly all its social and commercial interests are identified with that town. Acreage, 8,760. Population returned with Hawick.

JEDBURGH,

BEDRULE, CRAILING, HOWNAM, OXNAM, AND SOUTHDEAN.

JEDBURGH is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, the capital of its parish, and the county town; 46 miles S.E. from Edinburgh (by Laner), 10 s. by w. from Kelso, the same distance N.E. from Hawick, and 12 N. from the English border; agreeably situate on the left bank of the Jed, the name of which river, with weorth, the Saxon name for hamlet, formed its ancient appellation of Jedeworth, or Jedworth. In the course of time it became perverted to its present designation; but through a very extensive district in the south the old name is partly retained, by pronouncing it Jeddart, or Jethart, which are almost exclusively used by the common people. The town which stands on the declivity of a hill, and surrounded on every side by others of considerable height, is in general well built, and consists of four principal streets which cross each other at right angles, and form a square or market place in the centre. The streets and principal shops are lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are supplied with excellent water. The river Jed, which takes its rise in the Carter, one of the hills of the Cheviot range, and runs along the south-east side of the town, is crossed by no fewer than seven bridges within a mile. In recent times Jedburgh has been greatly improved, and many new buildings have been erected. The principal architectural and antiquarian object of attraction in the town is the abbey, which stands upon a piece of ground between the houses and the river. Although for the most part in a ruinous condition, it still exhibits an outline of its original magnitude and magnificence. To preserve the venerable edifice from the destruction towards which it was hastening, it several years since received considerable repairs, which were so judiciously conducted as not to interfere with or alter the original design of the structure, which is of Gothic and Norman order. It was founded for canons regular by David I. It runs from east to west, and appears to have been originally three storeys in height; the nave from the tower, and the south front are mostly entire, but there is no roof on any part of it. The tower, which is still standing in tolerably good preservation, is about 90 feet in height. Among the other prominent public buildings of Jedburgh are the Gaol and Bridewell, the Town Hall and the Corn Exchange; the first named is designated the "Castle," from its occupying the site of the ancient fortress. It is a fine erection, in the castellated style, but is no longer used as a prison. From its elevated situation it is seen at a considerable distance, and from its summit a delightful view is obtained. The Town Hall is a commodious edifice, built in 1811. The Corn Exchange is situated in Exchange street. Jedburgh is a burgh of very ancient erection, and, from a charter granted by William the Lion, appears to have been a place of note previous to 1165. It has the honour of parochial precedence, being the oldest parish in Scotland of which any historical record has been transmitted to posterity. Prior to the Union it was a place of importance, and one of the principal towns in the south of Scotland. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and a council elected by the constituents resident within the royalty. The lords justiciary and lords commissioners of the jury court hold courts here for the south circuit (which includes the counties of Roxburgh, Berwick and Selkirk), generally in April and September and the sheriff holds a court on Monday and Thursday for the dispatch of civil business, and a small debt court and the ordinary sheriff court every Thursday. The justices of the peace hold their court on the first Tuesday in every month; and here also the court of general quarter session sits. The burgh formerly joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick, and Lander in returning one member to Parliament, but under the Redistribution Act, it is now merged in the county. The manufacture of tweeds, blankets, plaidings, &c., is carried on to a large extent, and in the neighbourhood are many corn mills. Considerable emolument is derived from the sale of the produce of the orchards and gardens that surround the town. There are places of worship belonging to the Establishment, the Free Church of Scotland, the United Presbyterian body, Independents, Episcopalians, and Roman Catholics. In connection with the town flourishes a horticultural society. The market is held on Tuesday, and fairs on the first Tuesday in March, 16th May if Tuesday, if not the Tuesday preceding, first Tuesday after 25th May, 20th July (or two days after St. Boswell's), 20th August if Tuesday, if not the Tuesday preceding, 25th September, and servants hiring, first Tuesday in November. Jedburgh parish comprises an area of 22,555 acres; the population in 1831 was returned at 5,147, and in 1891, 4,951, and the town 3,897 of that number.

BEDRULE is a parish in the centre of the county, bounded on the east by Jedburgh, on the north by Ancrum, by Hobkirk on the south, and on the west by Cavers. The village of Bedrule consists of the parish church, school, and a few scattered houses, and is distant from Jedburgh about four miles. Acreage, 3,917; population in 1831, 269, and in 1891, 246.

CRAILING is a parish and village, the latter situated about 4 miles N.E. of Jedburgh and 6½ s. from Kelso, bounded on the west by Ancrum, on the south by Jedburgh, on the north by Roxburgh, and on the east by Eckford. There are two small villages in the parish, CRAILING and NISBET. The places of worship and school are at Craling. The North British railway intersects the parish, and there is a station at Nisbet. Acreage, 5,908; population in 1841, 638, and in 1891, 600.

HOWNAM is a parish situate amongst the Cheviot hills, bounded on the south by the county of Northumberland, on the east and north by Morebattle, and on the west by Eckford, Jedburgh and Oxnam. The village of Hownam is distant from Jedburgh about 9 miles, and from Kelso about 12. Acreage, 15,075; population in 1831, 263, and in 1891, 223.

OXNAM is a parish on the borders of Northumberland, bounded on the east by Hownam, on the north and west by Jedburgh and Southdean. The village of Oxnam is four miles from Jedburgh, which is the nearest town and railway station. Acreage, 21,160. Population in 1831, 603, and in 1891, 607.

SOUTHDEAN is a parish in the southern part of Teviotdale, bounded on the north by Jedburgh, on the south by Castleton and the county of Northumberland, on the west by Hobkirk, and on the east by Oxnam. The parish church and school are at CHESTERS, a hamlet in this parish. Acreage, 27,929. Population in 1831, 724, and in 1891, 612.

KELSO,

ECKFORD, EDNAM, HEITON, MAKESTOUN, NENTHORN (Berwickshire), ROXBURGH, SMALHOLM, SPROUSTON, AND STICHILL.

KELSO is a burgh of barony, a considerable market town, and the capital of its parish, 32 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 10 N.N.E.
from Jedburgh, 23 S.W. from Berwick upon Tweed, 60 N. by E. from Carlisle, and 6 W. from the English border. It is connected with the North British and the Newcastle and Berwick railways by branches which approach within a short distance of the town, and it occupies an extensive plain on the north bank of the Tweed, opposite the confluence of the Teviot with that river, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful amphitheatre of wood-clad hills. Kelso is of very great antiquity, and has been the scene of many memorable events in early history. Its border situation subjected it to almost continual incursions of enemies, and to several conflagrations.
To the latter infliction, however, it is indebted for the modern and uniform style which now characterises its appearance. It is built after the manner of the Flemish towns, having a spacious square in the centre, from which diverge four principal streets. On the east side of the square stands an elegant town hall, erected in 1816, which is adorned with a fine portrait of an ancestor of the present Duke of Roxburgh. In this hall periodical courts are held by the sheriff, justices of the peace, and magistrates, as are also the meetings of the commissioners of police. On the ground floor is a large enclosed piazza, which on market days is opened for the use of the farmers and others attending the market. In the Wood market has been erected a very elegant Corn Exchange, which has proved a great boon to the farmers and merchants. The bridge which crosses the Tweed was built in the beginning of the present century, at a cost of about £18,000, after a plan by the late Sir John Rennie, the architect of Waterloo Bridge, London, of which it may be said to be a model. It consists of five arches of equal span, and is well worthy of the stranger's notice, particularly for the beautiful views obtained from it, which are not surpassed on any other part of the Tweed.
About 200 yards above this bridge occurs the confluence of the Tweed and the Teviot. On the north bank of the Tweed is Floors Castle, the princely residence of the Duke of Roxburgh, and on the south bank of the Teviot is Springwood Park, the beautiful seat of Sir George Brisbane Douglas, Bart. In the centre may be seen the ancient castle of Roxburgh, with the Eildon hills in the distance, while on the right hand are the venerable remains of Kelso Abbey, founded by David I. in 1128.
This magnificent ruin is entirely of the transition Norman style of architecture, of which it is a splendid specimen. During the repairs of this monument of ancient ecclesiastical magnificence some years ago, on removing the rubbish from the base of the structure, the fragment of a bell was found, which is supposed to have been, when perfect, about 3 feet in diameter and one ton and a half in weight.
At the east end of the town is situated Shelden Park, which was presented to the inhabitants by Mrs. Robertson, of Ednam House, in memory of her nephew, who perished in the search for Sir John Franklin.

The government of the town is vested in a senior and two junior magistrates and a body of commissioners of police, who derive their powers from the Scotch Burgh Police Act. The town is lighted with gas, and is well supplied with spring and river water, and of all the towns on the border it stands pre-eminent for its cleanly and orderly appearance. The principal branches of business are comprised in an extensive manure and oilcake manufactory, an iron foundry, and carriage building and fishing tackle works. There are also many corn mills in the neighbourhood. The domestic trade of Kelso is well supported, and many of the shops are furnished with very extensive stocks of all sorts of goods necessary for the consumption of an inland district. The trading and monetary interests of the town are aided in their transactions by the establishment of four banking houses, branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank. The principal hotel is the Cross Keys. There are several places of worship in Kelso, exclusive of the Established church, some of them presenting very fine and handsome exteriors. Their designations, &c. are given on a subsequent page.

Among the several benevolent institutions supported by the inhabitants may be enumerated the Dispensary, founded in 1777, which has been reorganised, the scheme for extending its usefulness including the employment of a staff of nurses for the treatment of poor persons either within the institution or at their own homes; there is also a society for educating poor children, and a Board school. The other educational establishments are high schools for boys and girls. The literary institutions include several libraries, and two news and reading rooms, a Mechanics' Institute and Working Men's Club,
an association entitled the Tweedside Physical and Antiquarian Society, and several benefit societies. Two newspapers are published in Kelso, under the titles of the Kelso Mail (established in 1797), and the Kelso Chronicle (in 1832). Kelso, which is at all times a place of gaiety and respectability, has additional liveliness imparted to it by the steep-slopes in spring, they being superior to any meetings of the kind in Scotland. The course, which is much admired, is situated about a mile to the S.W. On it is an excellent stand on the model of that at Doncaster. The weekly market, chiefly for corn and in the winter months for stone cattle, is held on Friday, and a market for fat cattle and sheep is held once a fortnight, on Monday. An annual fair and also the annual show of the Border Union Agricultural Society takes place on the 5th of August. Area-ce of the parish, 5,384; population in 1881, 5,235, and in 1891, 4,780, of which the town contained 4,171.

ECKFORD, a small parish and village, the latter situated near the confluence of the Kale and the Teviot, 5½ miles S. from Kelso and about 2 from Kirkbank station on the Roxburgh and Jedburgh branch of the North British railway. Population in 1881, 912, and in 1891, 757.

EDNAM, or Edenham, is a small village and parish, the former pleasantly situated on the small river Eden, about 2½ miles N.E. from Kelso. It is celebrated as the birthplace of the poet Thomson, his father having been incumbent of the parish; a monument erected to the memory of the poet stands on an eminence near the village.
The land of the parish ranks among the finest in this fertile district, and is exceedingly well cultivated and enclosed. About two miles from Ednam is situated the beautiful mansion of Newton Don, the seat of Charles B. Balfour, Esq. The nearest railway station is Kelso, 3 miles distant. Area of the parish, 3,849; population in 1881, 613, and in 1891, 681.

MAKERSTOUN is a small agricultural parish on the north bank of the river Tweed, bounded on the east by Kelso, on the north by Smailholm, and on the west by Mertoun, distant about 5 miles w. from Kelso. The nearest railway station is at Rutherford, 2 miles distant. Acreage, 2,665; population in 1881, 381, and in 1891, 401.

NENTHORN is a parish in Berwickshire, but abutting on Roxburghshire, about 4 miles n.w. from Kelso, 2 w. from Stichill, 7 s. from Earlston, and about the same distance s. from Greenlaw; situated on a gentle slope from the river Eden; its length is about four and a half miles, and its width about three and a half. The nearest railway stations are at Kelso, 4½, and Gordon, 4 miles, distant respectively. Acreage, 2,454; population in 1881, 453, and in 1891, 400.

ROXBURGH is a small village and parish, situate about 3 miles s. from Kelso, bounded by Makerstoun and Kelso on the north, Maxton on the west, Avenum on the south, and Crailing and Eckford on the east, and is a station on the North British railway. Acreage, 7,781; population in 1881, 1,012, and in 1891, 954.

SMAILHOLM is a small agricultural village and parish, situate about 6 miles w. from Kelso, and in the north-eastern part of the county. The nearest railway (for goods) is at Farn Loanend, about 4 miles from the village. Acreage, 4,194; population in 1881, 445, and in 1891, 340.

SROUSTON is a parish and village situate about 2½ miles n.e. from Kelso, on the south bank of the river Tweed. The North-Eastern railway passes through the parish, and there is a station here. Acreage, 8,635; population in 1881, 1,026, and in 1891, 1,006.

STICHILL is a small village and parish situate about 3 miles n. from Kelso, its nearest railway station, and the same distance s. from Hume, and is bounded on the east by Eccles, on the north by Greenlaw, and on the south by Ednam and Nenthorn. Acreage, 6,898; population in 1881, 343, and in 1891, 314.

LILLIESLEAF, BOWDEN AND MIDLEM.

LILLIESLEAF is a village and parish, the former 10 miles from Galashiels, the same distance N.W. from Jedburgh, 8 S.E. from Hawick, 6 S.E. from Selkirk, 3 W. from New Belies station, and 4 S. from Haselden station on the North British Railway. The places of worship consist of the parish church and a United Presbyterian church. There are two schools in the village—a Board school and Currie's Female school. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture and trades connected therewith. The parish, which is four miles in length by nearly three in breadth, is intersected by the Ale water. The lands are under good tillage, and the district has a very pleasing appearance. Acreage of the parish, 6,673; population in 1881, 718, and in 1891, 614.

BOWDEN is a parish and village, the latter being 2½ miles S. from Melrose and a mile and a half from St. Boswells Railway station, standing in a low situation, through which a rivulet passes to the Tweed. The places of worship comprise the parish church, a very ancient building, and a Free church; there is also a Board school in the village. The parish comprises a portion of the Eildon hills, from which the land gently declines in well cultivated and enclosed fields. The vestiges of a Roman military road, with circular stations or encampments, may be traced in this district, and a ruin at HOLYDEAN, at an early period a strong fortification, and the ancient residence of the now noble family of Roxburgh. Within the parish, besides Bowden, is the small village of MIDHOLM, or Midlem, pleasantly situated on rising ground, two miles from Lilliesleaf. Here is a Board school and a chapel for the Original Secession. Acreage of Bowden parish, 7,667; population in 1881, 769, and in 1891, 694.

MELROSE,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF NEWSTEAD, GATTONSIDE, DARNICK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MELROSE is a parish and free burgh of barony. The town, small and ancient, is 36 miles s. by e. from Edinburgh, 12 n.w. from Jedburgh, 7 n.e. from Selkirk, and 4 s.e. from Galashiels, delightfully situated at the foot of the Eildon Hills, and on the line of the North British railway. The station, a spacious and handsome erection, presents a very fine appearance, and being situated on rising ground, may be seen from all parts of the neighbourhood. The town is built in the form of a triangle, with small streets leading out at the corners. In the centre stands the cross, a structure supposed to be co-eval with the abbey. There are a number of new and handsome houses in the western suburbs, while others exhibit proofs of great antiquity, presenting decorated stones that once undoubtedly formed a portion of the superb abbey for which the place is so celebrated. The Corn Exchange stands in the Market place; it is a handsome structure and contains an elegant hall, capable of accommodating an audience of about 500. There are four hotels and posting houses in the town, namely, the Abbey, the George, the Station, and the King's Arms. The Ormiston Institute, erected out of a sum of £4,000 bequeathed by Mr. Charles W. Ormiston, of Melrose, comprises reading and smoking rooms, billiard room, &c.; the cost, including the furniture, being £1,700. The remainder of the capital sum is held as an endowment fund. A large pond for skating during the winter months has been constructed at the west end of the town. The Abbey of Melrose, one of the largest and most magnificent Gothic structures in the kingdom, adjoins the town on the south side of the Tweed. On viewing the exterior of this noble pile of building from the south it has a most imposing effect; but on entering the interior, the lofty Gothic columns, in a double row, supporting the majestic arched roof—the elegance and variety of its sculpture, the multiplicity of its statues, the beauty of its stone, and the symmetry of its parts, must strike every stranger with profound admiration. It was founded in 1136 by King David, who dedicated it to the Virgin Mary, and endowed it with extensive privileges and almost princely revenues. The monks were of the Cistercian order, and this monastery was the mother foundation of all establishments of that order in Scotland. It is somewhat remarkable that it is only within the limits of the present century that Melrose Abbey became an object of interest to the tourist. This was principally awakened by the publication of the "Lay of the Last Minstrel," a poem by Sir Walter Scott, whose description of this venerable time-recalling fabric induced the visits of strangers from all quarters. At the beginning of the present century, and until the erection of the present church on the Weirhill, the abbey was used as the parish church. There are churches belonging to the Free church, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Evangelical Union denominations. About two miles east from the town is the site of the still more ancient abbey of Old Melrose, founded in 664, and said to be the first abbey of the Culdees settled in this part of the kingdom. All that remains, however, of the old structure is a small ruin on a peninsula formed by the Tweed, whose banks around it are lofty and wooded, varied with perpendicular rocks, jutting out into the river like buttresses; the situation is in the highest degree pleasant, commanding a fine view of the valley of the Tweed. About a mile nearer the town of Melrose is the village of NEWSTEAD (with a population in 1891 of 252), near which was another Abbey, called the "Red Abbey." About a mile north of Melrose is the Waverley Hydropathic Establishment, a noble and stately building. The situation is dry and airy, and well sheltered from the prevailing westerly winds. It commands a splendid view to the south and east, including the romantic three-peaked Eildon Hills, and some beautiful stretches of the river Tweed, the valley of which lies open as far as Leaderfoot, and the view is bounded by the heights of Bemersyde. The site of the building is the well-known Skirmish bill, where was fought one of the last border frays of the district. Previous to the abolition of hereditary jurisdictions, Melrose was a burgh of regality; but now it is a free burgh of barony, and governed by a baron bailie chosen by the burghesses. A justice of peace court is held here on the last Wednesday in every month. The banks of the Tweed are clothed with plantations in the finest order, and the land around appears in the highest state of cultivation. The Roxburgh, Berwick and Skelkirk District Lunatic Asylum, situated about three-quarters of a mile from the town, at the foot of the Eildon Hills, and opened in May, 1873, is a handsome building, erected at a cost of £57,000, and is capable of accommodating between 200 and 300 patients. The building is beautifully situated, and with the grounds occupy an area of nearly 35 acres. Acreage of the parish 25,794. Population of the parish in 1881, 4,519, and in 1891, 4,321, of which the town contained 1,520.

The antique and rural village of GATTONSIDE stands on the north bank of the Tweed, in the parish of Melrose, with which town a communication is maintained by means of a suspension bridge, which was opened on the 26th of October, 1826. For each passenger a charge of a halfpenny was made until Whit Sunday, 1885, when the bridge was made free. The village is surrounded with orchards, and it is computed that a greater quantity of fruit is grown about this place than in any other part of the vale of the Tweed. Population in 1891, 288.

DARNICK is a small village in Melrose parish, situated on the road leading to Galashiels, and now almost joined to Melrose town. In the centre of the village stands the ancient stronghold of the lairds of Darnick, that exquisite bit of border antiquity, Darnick Tower. Population in 1881, 448, and in 1891, 307.

NEW CASTLETON

IS a modern village, in an extensive mountainous parish, formerly known by the name of Castletown, but more generally by the popular title of Liddesdale, being in the vale of the Liddle water. The village, which owes its rise to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, and which has superseded the old parish village (a little further up the vale), is 26 miles s.w. from Jedburgh, 20 s. from Hawick, and 10 n.e. from Canohy; situate in the centre of the lower and more arable part of the district, on the road which proceeds up Liddesdale. It consists principally of two long streets of neat houses, which occupy a haugh on the right bank of the Liddle. Except that a few of the inhabitants are employed by the cotton manufacturers of Carlisle, there is no business worth mentioning. The parish is upwards of 18 miles in length by 14 in breadth. The northern part is mountainous and bleak, but affords good sheep pasturage. On the east, near the head of the parish, rise the rivers Tyne and Liddle, in the midst of a vast bog, called Dead Water, on account of its stagnant appearance. Mineral springs, which are of considerable repute for their medicinal properties, exist at Flat, Lawston, Thorlies Hope and Tweeden, the last of which exhibits the various stages of the petrifying process. The banks of the river are covered with natural wood and extensive plantations, which afford an infinite variety of the most picturesque scenery. Within the district are the ruins of no less than five churches, and of many castles and fortified places; but the most remarkable object in Liddesdale is the ancient castle of Hermitage, erected in the thirteenth century, by Comyn, Earl of Monteith, and one of the largest fortresses on the border. It has been repaired by the Duke of Buccleuch, and during this operation several small pieces of cannon were found, and a gold ring evidently of very old manufacture, bearing the inscription In Broaderlie Amite. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and one each for the Evangelical Union, and United Presbyterian denominations. A mission hall was built in 1883, at a cost of about £1,100 raised by public subscription. There is also a Board school in the village. Fairs are held in April, May, September and November; some of them are for hiring servants. The acreage of the parish is 67,858, and in 1881 it had a population of 2,256, and in 1891, 2,094, of which the village contained 861.

ST. BOSWELLS,

MAXTON, NEWTOWN ST. BOSWELLS, AND MERTOUN.

ST. BOSWELLS (or LESSUDEN) is a small village in the parish of its name, 10 miles s. by w. from Kelso, 9 n.w. from Jedburgh, and 4 s.e. from Melrose; situated nearly in the centre of the parish, at the east end of a spacious green, and distant about one mile from the St. Boswells station on the North British railway. The village of St. Boswells consists of one long street, running east and west from the green. A few years ago great improvements were effected in the village, and an ample supply of water is now obtained from Whiterigg Bog. The places of worship comprise the parish church and a Free church. There is also a Board school. The Buccleuch Arms Hotel, much frequented during the hunting season, is situated on the green. Here, too, are the kennels belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch's foxhounds, which pack is the largest in the south of Scotland, and hunts the three counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick. On the green at St. Boswells is held about the 18th of July one of the most important horse fairs in Scotland. This fair also attracts a large number of salesmen of miscellaneous goods, and it is still frequented by the direct descendants of the gipsies for the disposal of earthen, horn and tin wares. The parish of St. Boswells is three miles in length, by from one and a half to two in breadth, and is beautifully enclosed, planted and cultivated. On the west rise the Eildon Hills, and on the east and north the ground is undulating, the latter quarter ornamented by the fine woods of Dryburgh, separated from the village by the Tweed, which is here a beautiful river, enclosed within high banks; beyond the Dryburgh woods rise hills of various altitudes that bound the prospect. Acreage of the parish 3,155. The population in 1881 was 959, and in 1891, 982.

The parish of MAXTON, which is about four miles in length by three in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, well enclosed and planted. The village of Maxton is about a mile s. from St. Boswells. On the estate of Littledean, about a mile from the church, are the remains of an old tower, once a strong fortification, and long the residence of the Kerrs, of Littledean. At Lilliard's Edge on the boundary betwixt this parish and that of Ancrum, was fought the famous battle between the Scots and English on the 14th of December, 1544, when the latter were totally routed with the loss of a thousand men slain and made prisoners. Acreage 4,442. Population in 1881, 426, and in 1891, 473.

NEWTOWN ST. BOSWELLS is a small village in the parish of Melrose, situated about 3 miles s. from that town, and one mile from St. Boswells. Large cattle sales are conducted here every alternate Monday by Messrs. John Swan & Sons, and Mr. Alexander Davidson, and there are also important lamb sales in July and August. In the village are situated a Presbyterian church, a Board school and the Railway Hotel. Here, too, is the St. Boswells station on the North British railway. Population in 1881, 450, and in 1891, 485.

MERTOUN is a parish in Berwickshire, abutting on Roxburghshire, extending six miles along the banks of the Tweed. CLINTMANS is a small village in the parish, and about 2 miles from St. Boswells village, and 3 from St. Boswells railway station on the North British line. Here are situated the parish church, manse, and Board school. Dryburgh Abbey is a superb monastic edifice of cruciform structure, now in ruins, and is much frequented by tourists as being the burial place of Sir Walter Scott. At a short distance from the Abbey is an Ionic temple, built by the late Earl of Buchan, about the year 1817, inside of which is the statue of Apollo, and surmounting the dome is a bust of the author of the "Seasons." His lordship also erected a colossal statue of Sir William Wallace. Acreage, 6,374. Population in 1881, 672, and in 1891, 650.

YETHOLM, LINTON, AND MOREBATTLE.

YETHOLM parish, 6 miles S.E. from Kelso, is bounded on the north-east and east by the English border, and divided into nearly equal parts by the water of Bowmont, an excellent trouting stream. The surface is hilly, but covered with verdure, and is pastured by numerous flocks of sheep. Situated on the western boundary is Yetholm or Primside Loch, measuring nearly a mile and a half in circumference. There are considerable haughs (or meadows) on the banks of the Bowmont; the soil is good, and adapted for wheat. The parish comprises two villages, or rather a village in two parts, situate on either side of the Bowmont; that on one side called TOWN-YETHOLM is about 8 miles S. from Kelso; the other, designated KIRK-YETHOLM, which is an improving place, is about a quarter of a mile on the other side of the stream. Yetholm is acquiring a reputation as a resort for invalids in the summer, and there is a demand for accommodation beyond what the place can supply, but efforts are being made to meet this demand. A fine view of the vale of Bowmont is had from the street going up the hill, named Starioch. The fairs formerly held at the villages are now discontinued, but an annual sheep show for shepherds' packs is held in October, and a flower and fruit show in September. Colonel Wauchop, of Nidrie, lord of the manor, encourages by his generosity improvements in connection with the village. Yetholm formerly was mostly inhabited by gipsies—a race remarkable for their disorderly lives and dangerous characters, and distinguished by peculiarity of habits from the general body of the community. Now, however, none follow the nomadic life of the tribe, all having betaken themselves to farm labour. The old parish church, which at the time of its demolition was the oldest thatched church in Scotland, has been replaced by an elegant edifice of black stone, the windows and corners being faced with white. Besides the Established church there are one each for the members of the United Presbyterian and Free churches. Acreage of the parish, 5,960; population in 1881, 1,045, and in 1891, 884.

LINTON is a strictly agricultural parish, extending nine miles in length by three in breadth; bounded by Sprouston on the north, Northumberland on the east, Eckford on the west, and Yetholm and Morebattle on the south, from which last-named place it is distant about a mile N. It is separated from the latter parish by the Kaile. Besides that stream it has two small lochs, one of which abounds with trout, the other with eels. The land which rises from the Kaile, is under the best system of cultivation. The church, which is beautifully situated on a high sand mound, is an old edifice, remodelled internally. There is an old carving of the legend of the "Worm of Wormington" on the outer wall. Acreage 6,398; population in 1881, 543, and in 1891, 468.

The parish of MOREBATTLE is about nine miles in length, with a mean breadth of four. It is bounded by Linton and Yetholm on the north, Eckford on the west, Hownam on the south, and the county of Northumberland on the east. The greater part of the land is hilly and pastoral, the low grounds only being arable. The Kaile and Bowmont run through the parish, both waters affording excellent sport to the angler. Near the former stream, at the distance of 7½ miles S.E. from Kelso, and 10 E.N.E. from Jedburgh, stands the village of MOREBATTLE, which is also becoming a summer resort, more accommodation being constantly provided. The ancient and more correct mode of spelling the name is Morebottle, which signifies "the dwelling place at the marsh." The vestiges of ancient camps and various ruins, particularly Whitten Castle and Corbet House, indicate this parish to have been the scene of frequent warfare. The places of worship are Established and Free churches and one for United Presbyterians. Acreage of the parish, 22,334; population in 1881, 1,003, and in 1891, 846.

SELKIRKSHIRE.

THIS small county, of irregular form, lies in the south of Scotland, bounded by Roxburghshire on the east and south-east, on the west by the counties of Dumfries and Peebles, and on the south and south-west by Dumfries-shire. The county extends twenty seven miles from south-west to north-east, and is seventeen and a half miles in breadth, exclusive of a small detached part on the east. Its area comprehends 257 square miles, or 163,232 acres, of which, nearly 2,000 acres are under water. In size Selkirk stands as the twenty-fifth, and in population the twenty-seventh of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—This border county was formerly designated the "Sheriffdom of Ettrick Forest," from being in a great measure the vale of the Ettrick and its tributary streams, and from its being covered with wood. It was stocked with large herds of deer, and formed a favourite scene for the enjoyment of the chase by the Scottish monarchs. In many of the royal charters it is entitled "The Forest," and before regular sheriffs were appointed it was placed under the jurisdiction of a keeper, who generally held the office of constable of the King's Castle at Selkirk. The ancient history of this county is so intimately associated with that of Roxburghshire (already briefly detailed), that but few incidents worthy of special notice exclusively belong to the district. Unlike Roxburghshire, this county contains few or no remains of ecclesiastical establishments, though it possesses a number of ruined "keeps," the seats of feudal strength; and among other objects worthy of the inspection of the antiquary is a large portion of a stupendous work of the Romanised Britons called the "Catrail," once a vast fosse, having a rampart on either side, constructed during the fifth century as a strong line of defence against the invading Saxons.

SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—With the exception of a very narrow portion on its eastern side, the county may be said to be a continual alternation of hill and dale, and many of the eminences rise to a considerable height. The principal vales are those of the Ettrick and Yarrow, besides a portion of the vale of the Tweed and the Gala; from these valleys there shoot out many "clenghs" and "hopes," that run up for some distance between the heights; these vales, as well as the waters (noticed hereafter) which pour through them, have been repeatedly the theme of Scottish as well as English lyrists. Around Galashiels and Selkirk the hills are now subjected to the plough, and in these situations wheat is raised at a considerable elevation above the level of the sea. In the upper valleys of Ettrick and Yarrow, tillage is confined to the haughs and low grounds contiguous. The principal mountains, with their altitudes, are—Blackhouse Hills, 2,370 feet; Windlestrae Law, 2,295; Law Kneis, 1,900; the Three Brethren, 1,978; Black Andrew, 1,966; Pentlaw, 1,964; Wardlaw, 1,900; Minchmoor, 1,877; Hangingshaw Law, 1,780; and Peatlaw, 1,557. Throughout the county generally agriculture is as well understood and practised as in any district of the kingdom. Great attention is paid to sheep farming and the improvement in the breed of sheep; this was stimulated, and kept up with great success, by the praiseworthy conduct of the late Lord Napier, who, at the termination of the war, betook himself to the vale of Ettrick, and commenced farming as an amusement. The shire is almost wholly stocked with white-faced sheep, except in a high tract of country towards the sources of its rivers, of which Hindhope, on the Ettrick, and Lawdhope, on the Yarrow, are the lowest points. Of minerals, none of the more useful have yet been found in this county, it being equally deficient of coal, lime, and sandstone; in some parts, however, abundance of whinstone is obtained, and a deal of granite. The manufactures of this county, which will be more particularly noticed in the Directory of Selkirk and Galashiels, consist in both towns of woollens, tweeds, tartans, shawls, and hosiery, together with the tanning of leather and the dressing of sheep and lamb skins. There are also several engineering and machine making establishments.

RIVERS, LAKES, AND RAILWAYS.—The county is well watered by the Ettrick, the Yarrow, and the Tweed. The latter valuable river, after draining Peebles-shire, intersects the northern extremity of Selkirkshire from west to east, during a placid course in a deep channel of nine miles, when it is joined by the Ettrick, and, receiving the Gala, passes on to Roxburghshire and Berwick-on-Tweed, where it empties itself into the German Ocean. The Gala cannot be esteemed a river of this county; it takes its rise in the parish of Heriot, in the county of Edinburgh, and flowing through a portion of Roxburghshire, falls into the Tweed about a mile below Galashiels. The Yarrow has its source at a place called Yarrow Cleugh, near the rise of the Moffat Water, in Dumfries-shire, and falls into the Ettrick two miles above Selkirk. The county has some small lakes, the chief being St. Mary's Loch, about three miles long, and less than one in breadth, and the loch of the Lowes, about a mile in length, and a quarter of a mile broad, lying at the head of the Yarrow. The principal railway line with which this county is connected is the North British, and the chief town that lies in its route is Galashiels, and a branch from the main line runs to Selkirk.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—The county of Selkirk contains only three complete parishes, namely, Ettrick, Stow, and Kirkhope, but has portions of seven other parochial divisions. There is a combination poorhouse at Galashiels, for paupers belonging to the parishes of Galashiels, Selkirk, Melrose, and Yarrow. The only towns are those of Selkirk and Galashiels—the former a royal burgh but not directly represented in Parliament. This county joins with Peebles-shire in returning a member to the Senate, the gentleman at present sitting being Walter Thorburn, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 was 753. The Lord Lieutenant is Lord Polwarth. According to the population returns for 1881, Selkirkshire contained 25,564 inhabitants, and in 1891, 27,349, an increase in the ten years of 1,785. The valuation of the county in 1891-92 (exclusive of burghs and railways), was £61,423; and of railways, £4,663.

GALASHIELS,

WITH CADDONFOOT, CLOVENFORDS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

GALASHIELS is a parliamentary burgh and market town of manufacturing celebrity, 31 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 18 E. from Peebles, 6 N. from Selkirk, 4 N.W. from Melrose, and 31 S. by W. from Berwick, in the parish of Galashiels, charmingly situated on both sides of the Gala, about a mile above the confluence of that river with the Tweed. The town joins with Hawick and Selkirk, under the name of the Hawick burghs, in sending one representative to Parliament, the gentleman sitting at present being Thomas Shaw, Esq. advocate, Edinburgh. It lies on the North British railway (Waverley route), for which line there is a station in the town; there is also a line to Selkirk, and to Edinburgh, Innerleithen, and Peebles. The parish of Galashiels was formed out of the two old parishes, Lindean, in Roxburghshire, and Boldside, in Selkirkshire, in the early part of the seventeenth century. Galashiels is comparatively of modern erection, the oldest houses not having been built more than a century, whilst the greater number have not existed more than fifty years. It is composed of several streets, most of which run parallel with the river; there are also a large number of handsome villas in the immediate neighbourhood, these being the residences of the manufacturers and merchants of the town. The Old, or High Town, as it is now called, contains the parish church manse, and a few of the original respectable dwellings; and this portion has also been much improved and enlarged by new erections. It is situated on a sort of table-land overlooking the picturesque vale of the Gala. The river is here crossed by six bridges, two being for foot passengers only. The Public Hall, erected by a joint-stock company, is a handsome building, situated in High street, two storeys high, the upper storey being used for public meetings, concerts, &c. A drill hall, erected for the 1st Selkirkshire Volunteers, is well adapted for concerts, public meetings, &c. There are also four other halls capable of accommodating from 300 to 500 persons. A Cottage Hospital, the funds for which were raised by public subscription, is now (1893) in course of erection at Eastlands. It will contain fourteen beds, and will be attended by the medical men of the town. The town enjoys the advantage of a library, maintained by the rates, according to the Free Libraries Act, and containing at present upwards of 6,500 volumes in almost every department of literature. Reading rooms are attached, and are well supplied with daily, weekly and monthly newspapers and magazines. For many years Galashiels has enjoyed a great distinction in the manufacture of tweeds. This is the staple of the place, and there are many houses engaged in it. This town, in common with others in the south interested in manufactures, sustained for a long period great inconvenience from its distance from seaports, railways, and collieries; but the extension of the North British railway to these parts has to a great extent obviated the obstructions that commerce had previously laboured under. The manufacturers and weavers meet annually on the Friday nearest the 10th of October, for the purpose of electing a deacon of their trade, and conferring on matters therewith connected. The business and commerce of the town and district are facilitated by branches of the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank. Other trades flourishing in Galashiels are those in connection with coal, corn, timber, and leather tanning. A small debt court is held in the town six times a year. Two newspapers are published, the Border Advertiser and the Scottish Border Record, which have a large circulation in the border counties.

The places of worship in Galashiels comprise four churches of the Establishment, two of the Free Church of Scotland, three for United Presbyterians, one for Episcopalians, two chapels for Baptists and one each for Roman Catholics and the Evangelical Union. St. Paul's Established church, in Scott street, is a fine edifice, erected at a cost of £15,000, raised by voluntary contributions. It is built of red freestone, from the Belses quarry, and is in the florid Gothic style of architecture, the architects being Messrs. Hay and Henderson, who restored St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh. The old Ladhope Free Church has been replaced by a new building in the early English pointed style of architecture, at a cost of about £5,000. The foundation stone was laid in February, 1885, by Lord Reay, the architects being Messrs. McKissack and Rowan, of Glasgow. It is built of whinstone of the district, with traceries and spire of freestone from the Swinton quarries. Educational matters are conducted by the School Board, which has six schools under its control. There are also schools in connection with the Episcopal and Roman Catholic places of worship, and two private schools. A short distance from the town is situated ABBOTSFORD, the beautiful seat of the late Sir Walter Scott. A grain market is held on Tuesday, fair on the third Wednesday of March, and a live stock sale every alternate Wednesday. The parish of Galashiels comprises an acreage of 8,440. According to the returns for 1881, the town contained a population of 15,330, and in 1891, 17,249.

CADDONFOOT is a quoad sacra parish (presbytery of Selkirk) in the north-eastern division of the county, and was erected in 1867. It is partly in the civil parish of Yarrow, and partly in those of Galashiels and Stow, the hamlet of CLOVENFORDS, 3 miles W. from Galashiels, being in the latter. Here is a station on the Peebles branch of the North British railway, and the celebrated vineries and orchard nurseries of Messrs. William Thomson and Sons, Limited. About a mile from Clovenfords is situated the church, a small stone building, and the board school. Within the parish are also Ashiestiel, the residence of the late Sir Walter Scott previous to his removal to Abbotsford, and Laidlawstiel, the residence of Lord Reay, of Durness.

SELKIRK,

WITH THE PARISHES OF ASHKIRK, ETRICK, HEATHERLIE, KIRKHOPE, AND YARROW.

SELKIRK is an ancient town, a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of its county and parish; 88 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 22 E. by s. from Peebles, 12 N.W. from Hawick, 8 S.W. from Melrose, and 6 S. from Galashiels, occupying a rising ground, at the foot of which flows the river Etrick. The place derives its name from a kirk established here at an early date, when the locality became distinguished as a hunting seat of the kings. In the oldest charter it is called Schleskirche, which signifies the Kirk of the Shiels or Shielings. After the transfer to Kelso of a monastery founded here by David I., about 1118, the town around the old castle received the dignified title of Selkirk Regis, while the village of the monks was denominated Selkirk Abbas. Of the Castle of Selkirk, at which David occasionally resided, little is known, and its size cannot now be satisfactorily ascertained. Formerly Selkirk exhibited but an indifferent appearance in its buildings and their arrangement; but a spirit of improvement has been developed which has imparted to the place an aspect far more prepossessing. Many handsome private houses have been built in the vicinity of the town. The Market place is embellished with a fine monument to Sir Walter Scott. In High street there is a monument in remembrance of Mungo Park, the African traveller, who was a native of Foulshields, in this county; it is the work of Andrew Currie, a native artist. In 1870 new buildings were completed for the business of the county, including sheriff court, room, and offices for sheriff clerk, procurator fiscal, and other officials. The old Town Hall in the Market place, which was the court room presided over by Sir Walter Scott as sheriff of the county, is now used for burgh courts, meetings of town council, police commissioners, and other public bodies. Selkirk was in past ages celebrated for the making of brogues (a description of single soled shoes); tradition carries the existence of this trade so far back as the period of the battle of Flodden, in which conflict, it is asserted, the brogue makers or "souters" of Selkirk took a distinguished part. As a further proof of the consequence and ability of the professors of this craft, it appears from the town records that when the Highland army, in 1745, commanded the magistrates of Edinburgh to furnish six thousand pairs of shoes, these civic officials made a call upon the burgh of Selkirk for no less than a third of the quantity, which was supplied, and soon after a few hundreds more. The principal manufactures now carried on consist of various descriptions of woollen goods—tweeds, tartans, plaids and shawls—and wool spinning and tanning, these together adding very materially to the prosperity of the town. A railway is open from here to Galashiels, where it joins the Waverley line of the North British system, thus giving to Selkirk railway communication with all parts of Great Britain. The town possesses three principal inns—namely the County, the Fleece, and Hogg's Station Hotel. Branches of the British Linen Company Bank, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, are settled here, and there is a Savings Bank. As a royal burgh, Selkirk is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and eleven councillors, one-third of whom retire annually. The sheriff court is held on Friday. The magistrates hold criminal courts as occasion requires. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May and August, and last Tuesday of October, and special justice of peace courts when found necessary. The places of worship are two churches of the Establishment, a Free church, two for United Presbyterians, an Episcopalian, a Roman Catholic, a Congregationalist, a Baptist, and an Evangelical Union chapel. The institutions for education in Selkirk consist of the burgh school and the Knowe Park Grammar school, under the Burgh School Board, the Philiphaugh school under the Landward School Board, and a Roman Catholic school. There is a County Subscription Library; and on the discontinuance of provincial prisons, that of Selkirk was purchased by Provost Craig-Brown who converted it into a Library and Reading Room, and presented it to the town. It contains two valuable replications in full size of "The Resting Mercury" and "The Adorante," recovered from the buried town of Herculaneum, and now in the Naples Museum. These were presented by Sir J. D. Gibson Carmichael, Bart. of Castle Craig. About one-third of the area of the ecclesiastical parish, embracing the lower part of the town, was disjoined in January, 1885, from the original parish, and erected into the quoad sacra parish of HEATHERLIE, in which are situated a small church of the Establishment and the Philiphaugh Board school mentioned above.

The rivers Etrick and Yarrow form a junction about a mile and a half above Selkirk, and empty their waters into the Tweed, about two miles below the town. The beautiful mansion of Bowhill, belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, the stately ruins of Newark Castle, the fertile straths, the serpentine windings of the two rivers, together with many elegant seats, form beautiful scenery, romantic and diversified. Philiphaugh, an ancient estate, an existing charter of which dates from the time of Robert the Bruce, and the scene of the disastrous battle in 1645, and now the residence of William Strang Steel, Esq., is a beautiful castellated mansion; amongst others may be noted The Haining, Sunderland Hall, and Broadmeadows. The market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the 5th April and 31st October. There is also an auction mart, where sales are held for cattle, &c. fortnightly on Wednesday. Acreage of the parish, 21,129; population in 1881, 7,432, and in 1891, 7,251, and of the town, 5,788.

ETTRICK is a parish situated in the south-west of Selkirkshire, bordering on Dumfriesshire. The Established church, situate about the centre of the parish, which is very mountainous, is 19 miles S.W. from Selkirk. There is also a Free church, serving for the two parishes of Etrick and Kirkhope, and a Board school. Thirlstone Castle, the residence of Lord Napier and Etrick, is situated in Etrick. Acreage, 42,387; population in 1881, 397, and in 1891, 414.

KIRKHOPE parish is in the presbytery of Selkirk. It formerly formed part of the parish of Yarrow, from which it was disjoined in 1851. The parish is very hilly, there being eight eminences in the parish above the height of 1,000 feet. A church of the Establishment and two Board schools are situated at ETRICK BRIDGE END, a small village in Kirkhope, 7 miles S.W. from Selkirk. There is also a school supported by the Duke of Buccleuch. Acreage, 22,724; population in 1881, 547, and in 1891, 500.

YARROW is a parish in the presbytery of Selkirk, lying south-west from that town. The parish is very picturesque, and its praises have been well sung by Hogg, the "Etrick Shepherd," to whose memory there is a monument at St. Mary's Loch. This loch is a great resort for visitors in summer, and excellent accommodation can be had at the Rodono Hotel and at "Tibbie Shiels," a favourite "houf" of Christopher North, who has immortalised it in his Noctes Ambrosianae. The Established church, situate about the centre of the parish, is 9 miles S.W. by W. from Selkirk. There are also a Free church and a Board school in the parish. Acreage, 50,148; population in 1881, 620, and in 1891, 688.

ASHKIRK, a parish formerly partly in Roxburghshire and partly in Selkirkshire, is now wholly included in the latter county. The village is 5½ miles N.W. from Hawick, its post town, and 6½ S. from Selkirk, on the river Ale, a tributary of the Teviot. Here are situate the parish church and the Board school. There is also a Free church in the parish, and Ashkirk House, the seat of Alexander Cochrane, Esq.; The Woll, the seat of W. S. Bell, Esq.; and Synton, that of John Scott, Esq. Acreage, 13,188; population in 1881, 500, and in 1891, 483.

STIRLINGSHIRE,

ONE of the most important and beautiful counties in Scotland, is situated partly in the Highlands and partly in the Lowlands. It is bounded on the east by the county of Linlithgow and the river Forth, on the south and west by Dumbartonshire, on the north by the shires of Perth and Clackmannan (which latter county touches it also on the east), and on the south and east by portions of Lanarkshire. Its boundaries are in many places distinctly marked by watercourses or lakes—the principal boundary line on the north being the Forth, the Avon on the east, the Kelvin river on the south, the Endrick water on the south-west, and Loch Lomond on the west. The figure of the county is extremely singular, and has been fancifully likened both to a fish and a serpent; its tail which diminishes to an apex at the north, is inserted between the counties of Dumbarton and Perth; and its head is suddenly turned towards the shires of Lanark on the south, and Linlithgow on the south-east. Its length from east to west is thirty-six miles, but following the curvature of its form from east to its northern point, it will measure upwards of forty-five miles; its breadth varies from twelve to twenty miles, except where it declines toward the north, and here the distance across is very trifling. The shire comprises an area of 447 square miles, or 286,838 acres. In size Stirling stands as twentieth, and in population as the ninth of the counties of Scotland.

EARLY HISTORY.—This county, from its situation between the Firths of Forth and Clyde, and on the direct passage from the northern to the southern parts, has been the scene of many memorable transactions; and there are few counties where monuments of antiquity are so frequently to be met with; neither does it yield to any in point of modern improvements or in the beauties of scenery. The wall of Antonius, built for the purpose of protecting the Roman conquests on the south, traversed the lower division of the county, and has left some slight traces for the investigation of the antiquary; the remains of Roman forts are also distinguishable, and weapons and coins of that invading power have been occasionally dug from the soil. After the overthrow of the Pictish sovereignty, Stirlingshire, with all the country on the south side of the Forth, was for some years under the dominion of the Northumbrian Saxons; and at a later period it passed quietly under the government of the Scottish sovereigns. Subsequently, considerable importance was attached to the county from the position and strength of the castle of Stirling (which will be found noticed more particularly under the head of that town), commanding as it did the most important pass betwixt the northern and southern districts of the kingdom. In the twelfth century it was much benefited by David I. who erected religious houses, particularly that at Cambuskenneth, within its bounds; and the inmates of these establishments being generally learned men, their pious authority tended to civilise the rude manners of the inhabitants.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—This county, as has been said, is partly Highland and partly Lowland. The former, which is the western quarter and adjacent to Loch Lomond, is a mountainous district; here the majestic Ben Lomond rises to the height of more than three thousand feet. East from this Highland part the land becomes flat, or gently inclining towards the Forth of the Endrick. In the centre of the county the ground is again elevated into a series of hills, of which those of the greatest altitude are from thirteen to fifteen hundred feet; from one of these eminences, in Kilsyth parish, there is obtained one of the finest views in Scotland; it is computed to embrace an extent of 12,000 square miles. Many of the hills in the central, and more especially in the southern division, have their sides and even their summits clothed with a fine grass sward, which affords excellent pasturage for sheep. The eastern division of the county consists of beautiful carse land, in many places quite flat, and in others presenting a succession of inclined planes, gradually rising towards the south from the rich valley of the Forth. In this quarter the county has experienced improvements of the most extensive and beneficial character; and it now exhibits the pleasing spectacle of fertile meadows, fields in the highest stage of tillage, with plantations, pleasure grounds, gardens, and orchards, all in the most exuberant vegetation and fruitfulness. Almost every variety of soil to be met with in Scotland occurs in Stirlingshire; but the most common and the most fertile in the county is the alluvial or carse land, which occupies many thousand acres on the banks of the Forth. In this species of soil there are beds of shells, clay, marl and moss. In the western and central districts, on the banks of the rivers, the land is generally of a light and gravelly description; while patches of rich loam present their surface to the husbandman in other parts of the county. From the great variety of soil, the system of agriculture in Stirlingshire naturally cannot be uniform, nor its produce equally abundant or limited to any particular species. Large crops of wheat, barley, beans, peas, turnips, potatoes, &c., are raised, and the culture of artificial grasses has also been very generally adopted in this county. The extensive ranges of moor in the upland district are exclusively devoted to the feeding of numerous flocks of sheep, which are of the old black-faced or Highland breed; there are but few cattle reared, the county being sufficiently supplied by the drovers from the Highlands. The shire is inferior to few districts of Scotland in the quantity and variety of its mineral productions, the most abundant of which are coal, ironstone, limestone and sandstone. The principal coal pits are in the southern base of the Lennox hills; but this valuable article is also obtained in the eastern district, in the vicinity of the Forth and Clyde Canal, and in such quantities as not only to be sufficient for home consumption, but also for exportation. Ironstone, limestone and sandstone are found in the same districts with the coal. Veins of silver were discovered and wrought about a century ago, but the working of them was soon discontinued; copper, lead, and cobalt have likewise been raised at different periods, but not to any considerable amount. The staple manufacture of this county is iron goods, both cast and malleable, the chief seat of which is at Carron, near Falkirk. The making of nails for carpenters' work is also carried on in several parishes (especially in that of Saint Ninians) to a considerable extent; at Saint Ninians are likewise manufactured tartans; at Stirling, carpets, tartans and shawls; and at Bannockburn (ever memorable for the decisive defeat of the army of Edward by the triumphant Bruce), tweeds are manufactured; while in other towns and localities are calico printing works, large distilleries, tanneries, breweries, chemical and other establishments.

RIVERS, MOUNTAINS AND RAILWAYS.—The Forth is the principal river in Stirlingshire. It takes its rise from a spring near the summit of Ben Lomond, and, after receiving in its course the Teith, the Allan, and the Devon, expands into that noble estuary called the Firth of Forth. Between Stirling and Alloa, a distance of only seven miles in a direct line, the stretch is more than twenty by the course of the river, owing to the numerous windings, which are termed "the links of the Forth." The next river in magnitude is the Carron, which has its source in the central district, and is navigable for vessels of large burthen for about two miles from the place where it forms a junction with the Forth. The other streams are the Avon, the Endrick, the Blank, and the Kelvin, none of which, however, require particular notice. Besides these waters, the county has the advantage of the Forth and Clyde Canal and the Union Canal, which is of paramount importance to the commerce of this productive and flourishing district. There are also numerous springs, but the most noted are the Airthrey Wells at Bridge of Allan, the waters of which contain saline and other properties, possessing medicinal virtues in the curing of skin and other diseases, and are largely drunk by great number of persons who resort hither for that purpose. The eminences of great altitude above the level of the sea are—Ben Lomond (before mentioned), 3,262 feet; Alda Hill, 1,600; and Campsie Fells, 1,500 feet. The county is intersected by the Caledonian Railway, and by the Forth and Clyde and the Edinburgh and Glasgow sections of the North British line, with several branches from each, thus affording facilities for communication with all parts of the kingdom.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Stirlingshire comprises twenty-two complete parishes, and portions of four others. It contains two parliamentary burghs—Stirling (which is the only royal burgh in the county), and Falkirk; the former joins with Culross, Queensferry, Dunfermline, and Inverkeithing in returning a member to the Legislature (Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman), and Falkirk is associated in representation with Linlithgow, Lanark, Airdrie and Hamilton (Harry Smith, Esq.). The county sends a third representative, the present member being William Jacks, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 was 13,112. The Lord Lieutenant is the Duke of Montrose, K.T. According to the Government returns for 1881, the population numbered 112,443, and by those for 1891, 125,604; an increase over the previous return of 13,161. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was £393,384, excluding railways, canals, and tramways, which amounted to £123,877.

AIRTH AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

AIRTH is an ancient village in the parish of its name, the latter about 6 miles in length by about 2 in breadth, 27 miles w. from Edinburgh, between 8 and 9 a.e. from Stirling, and 6 n.w. from Falkirk, situate on the banks of the Forth, nearly opposite to Kennetpans. It was at one period a place of considerable importance, but is now greatly decayed. It possesses an Established church, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and an Episcopal church at Dunmore. There are three small ports or harbours on the Forth, into which vessels of light burthen can enter, and two ferries across that estuary, at which are boats for the transport of cattle, carriages, &c. to Alloa, and other places on the Fife side. The salmon fishery is prosecuted here with considerable success. Airth Castle, the property of Colonel Graham, is an elegant mansion, in the pure Gothic style, and few buildings are superior to it, either in chaste simplicity of architecture or elegance of design. In the parish are three ancient towers, one at Airth, another at Dunmore, and a third at Powfoulis; that at Airth is of very early date, and is called Wallace's Tower, from the circumstance of that hero having privily entered the building, slain the captain and one hundred men, and released his uncle who was a prisoner; the tower is still in tolerable preservation. Some years ago an anchor was found in Dunmore Hill, at least half a mile from the present course of the river. The whole parish, with the exception of the hills of Airth and Dunmore, is a level tract, and the soil rich and well cultivated. Acreage of Airth parish, 5,477; population in 1881, 1,362, and in 1891, 1,256, of which the village contained 420.

BALFRON

IS a manufacturing village in the parish of its name, 19 miles N. from Glasgow (its post town), the like distance w.s.w. from Stirling, and 16 n.e. from Dumbarton, agreeably situated on the declivity of a hill. The parish is about 11 miles in length and 3 in breadth; bounded on the east and south-east by Gargunnoch and Fintry, on the south and south-west by Killearn and Drymen, and on the north by Kippen. The works of Messrs. H. W. Pollock & Co., cotton yarn spinners and shirt makers, are situated in this village, and employ a number of the inhabitants, chiefly females. A branch of the British Linen Company Bank is in the village. On the site of the old parish school there has been erected a handsome and commodious public school, with a dwelling-house for the schoolmaster. The school is capable of accommodating about 250 children, and is under the charge of Mr. Robert Sewell, one of the few remaining schoolmasters appointed by the heritors prior to the passing of the Education Act. The village has recently been supplied with water from a spring on Spittal farm, at a cost of £800. There are churches of the Establishment, a Free and two United Presbyterian churches and a Roman Catholic chapel. The annual fair is held on the last Tuesday in May. Acreage of the parish, 7,820. Population in 1881, 1,327, and in 1891, 1,203.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN,

WITH THE PARISHES OF LECROFT AND LOGIE, AND THE VILLAGES OF MENSTRIE AND BLAIR LOGIE.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN, a beautifully romantic and fashionable watering place, is situated on the river Allan, about one mile and a half from its confluence with the Forth, 3 miles N. from Stirling, and nearly at the western extremity of the Ochil hills. A small portion of it is in the parish of Lecroft, and the remainder in that of Logie; and it is also situated in two counties—Stirling and Perth. It is a post town and a station on the Caledonian line. It is resorted to by persons from all parts of the world, as well for pleasure as for restoration of health, on account of the mildness of the climate, the beauty of the surrounding scenery, and the fame of its saline mineral waters. Prior to the discovery of these springs, the place was comparatively little known, and presented to the tourist the unassuming aspect of a small and quiet country hamlet, with a few whitewashed and thatched cottages embosomed in venerable trees; together with an old mill and an ancient public house offering "entertainment for man and beast." Since that period things have greatly changed, and Bridge of Allan is now a large and handsome village, consisting of well-built houses and tasteful villas. There are also several hotels, which for elegance and comfort are not surpassed in Scotland. In 1871 Bridge of Allan was made a burgh under the provisions of the Lindsay Act. Its municipal affairs are managed by nine commissioners, who (from their own number) elect a senior and two junior magistrates. The higher part of the village in the neighbourhood of the wells and Coneyhill is of considerable elevation, forming a terrace or plateau, on which many handsome villas are erected, the sloping sides of the hill being tastefully adorned with trees, commanding a most beautiful and varied series of views, including Stirling, its castle and carse, watered by the Forth, Teith and Allan, with other objects of interest. Numerous improvements were made for the accommodation and recreation of the public by the late Major J. Alexander Henderson, of Westerton, on whose estate a considerable portion of the village is erected.

There are churches of the Establishment, a quoad omnia parish church, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and a Scotch Episcopal church. Among the various attractions and objects of amusement are billiard and bagatelle rooms, reading rooms and a library, the M'Farlane gallery of sculpture and pictures, two bowling greens, Keir Gardens, the seat of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell, which are open once a week to the public, and several miles of good angling. The late great patron of the place also revived the ancient and interesting game of tilting at the ring, a sport much practised in the reign of James I., and which is still one of the chief among the many attractions of the now famous "Strathallan Meeting," annually held on the first Saturday of August, in the public park, situate at the east end of the village. The above meeting for Scottish athletic games takes pre-eminence of all others in Scotland. It is, however, chiefly to its mineral wells that Bridge of Allan owes its principal claims to attention. These are situated on the Airthrey estate, the property of Donald Graham, Esq., and within a few minutes' walk of the village. They are highly celebrated for their medicinal virtues, externally and internally, and have proved of great benefit to numerous invalids. There are convenient baths, and the hotels before noticed are admirably suited for the reception of families and other visitors; while the walks around are beneficial auxiliaries in improving the health of the invalids. Among the business establishments, besides the inns, are large bleaching and dye works, and a paper manufactory. The Bridge of Allan connects the parishes of Lecroft and Logie, at the confluence of the Teith and Allan, and is celebrated for the beauty of its scenery. The lords of the manor are the trustees of the late Sir James E. Alexander and Donald Graham, Esq. of Airthrey Castle. Population of Bridge of Allan in 1881, 3,005, and in 1891, 3,221.

LOGIE, or Blair Logie, is a parish situated on the Forth at a part where the counties of Perth, Stirling and Clackmannan meet, a portion of the parish being situated in each of the three counties, the larger portion being on the north bank of the river Forth, opposite Stirling. Within the parish, on a flat peninsula formed by a sinuosity of the river, is the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth Abbey, founded by David I. in 1147, and once a pile of great magnitude. Within the precincts of the Abb'y James III. and his Queen were interred. During some excavations made some years ago among the ruins the royal remains were discovered and re-interred. A beautiful tombstone now marks the spot, being erected at the expense of Her Majesty. The plain adjacent to the abbey was the arena on which Wallace obtained his first open and signal victory over the arms of King Edward. The village of Blair Logie is most agreeably situated at the base of the Ochil hills, at the entrance to SHERIFF MUIR and the mouth of Glendevon, and presents a singularly pleasing scene of natural beauty, and is a favourite resort in summer for visitors from the large towns. The kirk, which is small and neat, stands about three miles from Stirling, and the same distance from Bridge of Allan. Acreage of the parish, 11,814; population in 1881, 4,696, and in 1891, 4,254.

MENSTRIE is a village partly in the parish of Logie, in the southern part of Perthshire, and partly in that of Alloa, Clackmannanshire. It is situated at the base of the Ochil hills, on the road from Stirling to Dollar, 5 miles N.E. from the former, 5 E. from Bridge of Allan, and 2 W. from Alva. The manufacture of different kinds of woollen fabrics gives employment to many of the inhabitants. A quaint old house in the village is pointed out as having been the birth-place of Sir William Alexander, who figured as statesman and poet during the reign of James VI. when he held his court at Stirling. Having become an especial favourite with that monarch he conferred on him the order of knighthood, besides various offices of high trust. He was afterwards created Viscount Canada, and first Earl of Stirling, at the coronation of Charles I. at Holyrood, in consideration of his services, and of having been the founder of the colony of Nova Scotia. The estates at a subsequent period passed into the possession of the Abercrombie family; and it was in the same house that in the year 1734 was born the celebrated general Sir Ralph Abercrombie. There is a large distillery here. Public Board schools were erected in 1875, at a cost of about £4,000. Population in 1881, 918.

DENNY AND DUNIPACE,

AND THE VILLAGES OF BONNYBRIDGE, DENNY LOANHEAD, AND HAGGS.

DENNY is a thriving and increasing post town in the parish of its name, 2½ miles w. from Edinburgh, 20 n.e. from Glasgow, 7 s. from Stirling, and 5 w. from Falkirk. The extent of the parish is about six miles long, by an average of four in breadth, bounded on the south-west by the parish of Kilsyth, and on the west and north by the Carron. The contiguous parishes are St. Ninians and Dunipace. It is on the road directly west from Falkirk, through the centre of the county, the road from Stirling to Glasgow also passing through the town. Near this parish is the Forth and Clyde Canal, which is of great benefit to agriculturists as well as the manufacturers of the district. Places of interest to the tourist in the neighbourhood are the Hermitage, Carron Glen, the ruins of Torwood Castle, and Lady's Leap. The banks of the Carron were the scene of many of the most interesting and heroic deeds recorded in Scottish history; but are now that of active industry, and a source of wealth to the surrounding country. The uncommon extent of the water power, as well as the purity of the stream, have caused the establishment of very considerable works on its margin, comprising paper and dyewood mills and chemical works, and in the district are extensive coal and iron mines, the whole furnishing employment to a large and industrious population. The Denny railway, opened in 1859, is a branch of the Scottish Central section of the Caledonian line, which joins the main line at Larbert, nearly four miles distant. The terminus is close to the town, from which run two sub branches extending to the iron mines in the neighbourhood, by which the ironstone is conveyed to works near Coatbridge, and the coal to Glasgow and Grangemouth for shipment over the country generally. There is a handsome hall, where the Oddfellows' lodge and public meetings are held. There is a lodge of the Ancient Order of Foresters, the Free Gardeners, and Freemasons, and a People's Club and Reading Room. The places of worship are the parish church, Free church, an United Presbyterian church, and a chapel for Roman Catholics. Large Public Board schools were erected in 1875 at a cost of about £5,000. Two fairs are held annually, one on the Wednesday before the 12th May, the other on the Wednesday after the 11th of November. Acreage of the parish, 8,809; population in 1881, 5,723, and in 1891, 6,373; of the latter number the burgh of Denny and Dunipace contained 4,160.

DUNIPACE is a parish divided into the four districts of Little Denovan, Meikle Denovan, Dunipace and Torwood, bounded on the north and west by the parish of St. Ninians, on the east by Larbert, and on the south by Falkirk and Denny. This locality is rendered famous in the works of most Scottish topographers from possessing two mounds called "the Hills of Dunipace," the origin of which or the purposes to which they were devoted have exercised the ingenuity and stimulated the researches of the antiquarian. The traditional account is that they were erected as monuments of a peace concluded upon their site between the Romans and the Caledonians; but there are strong reasons for presuming that they are sepulchral memorials. It was at Dunipace that Edward I. of England, on the 14th of October, 1301, signed a warrant to his ambassadors—then in France—authorising them to consent to a truce with the Scots as an indispensable preliminary towards a peace with their ally the French king, between whom and Edward a destructive war had long been waged. This parish is rich in minerals, and has an extended line of the Denny branch of railway crossing the river Carron, which divides this and the adjoining parish of Denny, extending to the mines, which give employment, with the other works, to the inhabitants of this district. The places of worship are Established and Free churches. Acreage of the parish, 5,886; population in 1881, 1,874, and in 1891, 1,715.

BONNYBRIDGE, about 2½ miles s.e. from Denny, has risen within the last twenty years from a small hamlet to a village of considerable size and importance. Several industries have during that time been established, and have expanded into gigantic proportions. Chief among these is the foundry of Smith & Wellstood, Limited, on the banks of the Forth and Clyde canal—celebrated for the manufacture of light and ornamental castings, and American stoves. The other leading trades are Oswald & Hall's paper mills, five brickworks, two saw mills, grain mills, a chemical works, &c. Bonnybridge was converted into a quoad sacra parish in 1877, at which time a very neat church was built here. It has a large public school, two public halls, post office, &c. There are two railway stations in the village—one belonging to the Caledonian, the other to the Caledonian and North British Companies jointly; and within a radius of a mile are two other stations.

DENNY LOANHEAD is a straggling village, situated about two miles south of Denny, in the same parish. A chapel for United Presbyterians is in the village, and a public school. Minerals abound in the neighbourhood, and there is also a large forge for the manufacture of spades and shovels. The Forth and Clyde Canal and the Caledonian Railway pass about a mile to the south.

HAGGS is situated about one mile and a half west of Denny Loanhead, and in the parish of Denny. It contains an Established church and a handsome public Board school, erected in 1875, at a cost of about £4,000. A distillery is at the extreme west end of the parish, at BANKER. The battle of Kilsyth was fought 15th August, 1645, in the neighbourhood of Hollandbush, near Haggs. Population in 1881, 1,500, and in 1891, 1,560.

DRYMEN,

BUCHANAN, GARTNESS, AND THE DISTRICT OF CROFTAMIE.

DRYMEN, a parish and village, 17 miles N.W. from Glasgow, 15 miles long by 10 in breadth, is bounded on the north by Aberfoyle, on the east by Kippen, Balfron and Killearn, on the south by Killearn, Kilmarnock and Dumbarton, and on the west by Buchanan and Kilmarnock. It lies on the south-eastern shore of Loch Lomond, into which, below the village, runs the river Eudrick. The village contains the parish church and one for United Presbyterians. A branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland is located in a handsome building well adapted for the purpose. Fairs for cattle are held on the last Wednesday in April (old style) and 17th May (new style). Acreage of the parish, 30,850; population in 1861, 1,451, and in 1891, 1,512.

BUCHANAN is a parish lying on the western extremity of the county, mountainous and moorish; it is bounded by the parish of Arrochar on the north, Loch Lomond on the west, by the river Eudrick on the south, and by Aberfoyle, Loch Katrine and Drymen on the east, and is about 24 miles in length by 5 in breadth. The river of Forth rises in the district at the back of Ben Lomond, and the Eudrick waters intersect the parish. Buchanan Castle, the seat of His Grace the Duke of Montrose, stands on the margin of Loch Lomond, and the Fort of Inversnaid near the head of the loch. The Montrose Home, opened by the Duchess of Montrose in May, 1891, is situated at Balmaha, on the borders of Loch Lomond. The institution, the cost of which was entirely defrayed by the Duchess, is in connection with the Evangelistic Institute of Glasgow, accommodation being provided for 30 poor children who are boarded for two weeks. Acreage of the parish, 41,598; population in 1861, 550, and in 1891, 658.

M'Kinnon John, M.B., C.M. Dryme

At GARTNESS, about 2½ miles from Drymen, is a fall of water of about 12 feet tumbling over a rock, which the salmon when going up the river clear by a leap. Near the village are two manufactories for woollen cloth and felting. It was here that Lord Napier of Merchiston (inventor of logarithms) resided when he was making his calculations. There is a station here on the Forth and Clyde section of the North British Railway. Population returned with Drymen.

CROFTAMIE is a district containing a few houses, in the parish of Kilmarnock (Dunbartonshire), situated about a mile and a half from Drymen parish; the Forth and Clyde section of the North British Railway runs through it, and the Drymen station is situated here. Population returned with the parish.

FALKIRK,

BOTHKENNAR, CAMELON, CARNOCK, CARRON, CARRON SHORE, LAURIESTON, POLMONT, AND REDDING.

FALKIRK is an ancient town, and the principal town of the eastern district of the county, as it is of the parish to which it gives name. The extreme length of the parish is nine miles, and its breadth from two to five and a quarter. It is bounded on the north by Denny and Larbert, on the South by Slamannan and Muiravonside, on the east by Polmont, and on the west by Dunbartonshire. The town is 24 miles W. by N. from Edinburgh, 22 N.E. from Glasgow, 11 S.E. from Stirling, and three S.W. from Grangemouth. It is situated on the face of an eminence, overlooking the broad expanse of country called "the Carse (or Kerse) of Falkirk," and commanding a most extensive prospect, which, for beauty of landscape, is scarcely surpassed in any part of Scotland. The views comprise (besides the rich and fertile "carse," which is well cultivated and interspersed with villages and several gentlemen's seats) the river Forth, with vessels passing to and from the ports of Grangemouth, Alloa, Kincardine &c., and also up and down the great canal, which intersects the country about half a mile north of the town; while to the south it is bounded by Callendar wood, shrouding a rising ground a short distance from the town. Few situations more eligible for rendering a place handsome could have been selected. As it is, the town has a very good appearance. It consists of (excluding a number of back streets and lanes, or wynds) one principal street, which is long and irregular. In general, the houses are built of hewn stone, and the town is ornamented with a steeple 146 feet high, in which are two bells and a clock. Immediately to the west of the steeple an equestrian statue of the late Duke of Wellington was erected in 1854 by public subscription. It is of stone, and is a great ornament to the High street. In the year 1859 a commodious Exchange or Corn Market was built on the north side of the parish church; this was replaced by a new hall in 1878. The Corn Market is now held in Neilson's Auction Mart. The port of Grangemouth, situate about three miles to the north-east of Falkirk, is connected with the burgh by a railway, formed by the Caledonian Railway Company. A number of small villas are situated towards the north of the town; they form a street, about half a mile in length, uniting to the town GRAHAMSTON and BAINSFORD, and thereby forming a continuous double line upwards of a mile in extent. Falkirk was created a burgh of barony in the reign of James I., afterwards a burgh of regality in the reign of Charles I., but no baron bailie has been appointed for many years. A body of "stent masters," chosen by the different trades of the town, formerly managed its affairs, but that body being abolished by act of Parliament, their powers and property were transferred to the magistrates. The town is governed by a provost, three bailies, and nine councillors. This body first came into existence in 1833, but for want of any power of raising money to carry on a municipal government, the powers of the magistrates were latent. This defect was remedied by an Act passed called the "Falkirk Police and Improvement Act," under which the magistrates assess the inhabitants for police and improvement purposes. The County buildings, erected in 1868, in lieu of the old court house, are situated in Hope street; the building includes court rooms for the sheriff and justices, procurator's hall, &c. At the same time a new prison and county police office were erected. New Burgh Buildings were erected in Newmarket street in 1878. The "bairns" of Falkirk have been long celebrated for a manly spirit of independence, both political and religious, combined with a liberality of sentiment and a sociality of intercourse seldom witnessed elsewhere. A bill was passed on the 24th July, 1888, empowering the Falkirk and Larbert Water Trust to introduce a supply of water from the Denny Hills, at a cost of about £80,000. Operations commenced immediately power was obtained and completed 29th July, 1890, on which date the works were opened by the Duke and Duchess of Montrose.

Falkirk, as it is situate in a very populous district, with no large town in the immediate neighbourhood, commands an extensive inland trade, no market being held in the seven or eight surrounding parishes; and the various iron and other works (from which the town derives material support) render it the market town for between fifty and sixty thousand people. Under the head of manufactures we may mention in addition to the leather trade in tanning and currying, the making of fire bricks and tiles, with a distillery, a brewery, and several chemical works. Besides the famous Carron Works, which are the oldest and most extensive in Scotland, there are the Falkirk Iron Works, the Gowan Bank Iron Works, the Grahamston Iron Company's Works, the Burnbank Iron Works, the Etna Iron Works, the Parkhouse Iron Works, Camelon Iron Works, the Callendar Iron Works, Abbots Iron Works, the Springfield Iron Works, and about a mile to the west are the Port Downie Iron Works, and the Forth and Clyde Iron Works. There are various coal mines in the vicinity, and extensive timber yards. The Union canal joins the Forth and Clyde canal about a mile west from the town, but its trade is limited, it having been purchased by the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway Company. About half a mile south of the town it passes through a tunnel 796 yards in length. Justice of peace courts and petty sessions are held as occasion requires. A sheriff court was first opened at Falkirk in 1834, for the eastern district of the county, comprising the parishes of Falkirk, Polmont, Muiravonside, Slamannan, Larbert, Bothkennar, and Airth. A fine block of stone buildings was erected in 1876, at the north side of the High street, styled the Glebe Buildings. There are five branch banks and a savings bank in the town.

The old church of Falkirk is believed to have been founded by the followers of St. Columba, and, with the church of Dunfermline, is considered to be one of the oldest Establishments on record erected on the mainland of Scotland for the exercise of public worship. The name of the town owes its origin to the church, and the Highlanders still call it by the old Celtic name of "Eglaise Bhreac," or spotted church, which is synonymous with the Old Saxon name "Fawrick," bearing the same meaning. The former church was taken down in 1810, and a new one erected on its site, but the tower connected with the ancient structure was, however, permitted to retain its position. The old church is now (1893) being partially restored; the south aisle, taken down in 1810, which was formerly in the possession of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and endowed by them, is now being rebuilt, along with the east and west aisles. These additional buildings, with other rooms in the tower, are intended to be used for Sabbath school and other church purposes. The cost of these alterations, including a splendid new organ, built by Messrs. Foster & Andrews, of Hull, will amount to about £3,200, which has been subscribed by the congregation and friends. The Kirk Session Records, which extend as far back as 1617, mention the fact that a marble tablet, which is now inserted in the tower, was found when the old church was taken down. It bears the following inscription:

MALCOLMO III.
REGE SCOTIE
AM 1057

In the churchyard lie the bodies of Sir John de Graham (the friend of Wallace) and Sir John Stuart, who were slain on the memorable field of Falkirk, in 1298, whilst fighting for the independence of their country against Edward I. A plain coffin-shaped stone marks the grave of the latter, and the Marquis of Bute has lately erected a large granite cross in front of the church, to the memory of the men of Bute who were slain with their chief, Sir John Stuart. There is also a monument to the memory of Sir John de Grème, which has been from time to time renewed. It was surrounded a few years ago by a handsome railing, surmounted by a Gothic cupola. A bronze casting of the two-handed sword used by this hero has been affixed to the tomb. The following is a copy of the old inscription:—

Here lyes Sir John de Grème, bath wit and wise;
Ane of the chief reskewit Scotland thrice,
Anc better knight not to the world was lent;
Nor was gyde Grème, of trvth and hardiment.

In the same cemetery stands the monument to two brave officers, Sir Robert Munro, of Foulis, and his brother, Dr. Munro, who fell in the second battle of Falkirk, between the forces of the Pretender and the Duke of Cumberland, January 17th, 1746. A monument of a semi-national character has been recently erected by Robert Dollar, Esq., of San Francisco, a native of Falkirk, "to the memory of William Edmondston, of Cambus Wallace, Captain-Lieutenant of the 17th Regiment of Foot, who, in defence of his king and of the liberties, sa red and civil, of his country, fell in battle near Falkirk, 27th January, 1746." Another slab bearing an inscription has been inserted, in memory of Mr. Dollar's mother, who was buried in the same grave.

Various sects have places of worship in Falkirk and neighbourhood; the situation of each, with their respective officiating ministers, are given in a subsequent page. All the burial grounds being closed by order of the sheriff, a cemetery has been provided for the entire parish; it embraces an area of eleven acres, and is situate about a mile west of the town. There are several public schools, and one or two private ones. A market for grain is held on Thursday. Seven fairs are annually held for cattle and horses, namely—the last Thursday in January, the first Thursday in March, the third Thursday in May, the second Thursday in June, the second Thursday in July, the third Thursday in August, and the first Thursday in November; besides two days for hiring servants (the first Thursday in April, and the last Thursday in October), called feeling Thursdays, which are numerously attended. The three Falkirk trysts, supposed to be the largest cattle markets in the kingdom, are held at Stenhousemuir on the second Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in August, September, and October. The population of Falkirk, including Grahamston and Bainsford, was in 1881, 15,599, and in 1891, 17,807.

CARNOCK is a small district in the parish of St. Ninians, but in the postal delivery of Larbert.

CAMELON is a village in the parish of Falkirk, situate on the road from Stirling to Falkirk, about a mile west from the latter town, on the line of the great canal; it consists chiefly of one tolerably well-built street. There are three foundries, before mentioned, while about half a mile further west are extensive chemical works belonging to Messrs. James Ross & Co. Camelon is a place of considerable interest to the antiquarian, having been represented by the early writers as a maritime city, in corroboration of which assertion fragments of anchors, blocks of stone with rings attached, and even an entire boat of ancient model, have been found embedded in the soil. The city, it is alleged, was built by Vespasian, and when subsequently possessed by the Picts had twelve brazen gates. No vestige, however, of this magnificent place remains except one portion of a wall, visible from the Glasgow road. The sea is now about four miles distant from the village.

CARRON is a village in the parish of Larbert, one mile and a half east therefrom; it is situated on the river Carron, and about a mile and a half from Falkirk. The immense ironworks of the Carron Company occupy almost the whole village. Population in 1881, 902.

CARRON SHORE is a village at the extreme north-east of Larbert, about two miles therefrom, situated partly in that parish and partly in that of Bothkennar, and about three miles from Falkirk. The river Carron passes the village, which contains a mission church belonging to the Establishment, a handsome United Presbyterian church, recently built, a Free Church school, and other schools. The Carron Company have numerous collieries here for supplying their works. Railways run in various directions from the works to these collieries. Population in 1881, 932.

LAURIESTON (or Lauriestoun) is a village in the parish of Falkirk, about one mile east from that town. Nail making, which was formerly carried on to a considerable extent, is now almost extinct.

This place was originally called Langtoun, afterwards Merchiston, and is now named Laurieston, in honour of the late Sir Lawrence Dundas, who made considerable additions to and much improved it. Population returned with Falkirk.

The parish of BOTHKENNAR, about two miles long by an equal breadth, lies in the carse of Falkirk, and about three miles therefrom. It is a rich and fertile district, possessing some excellent orchards, and contains the parish church and school. It is bounded on the north by the parish of Airth, on the west by the parish of Larbert, on the south by the parishes of Falkirk and Polmont, and on the east by the river Forth. Coal abounds in the parish, which is got to supply the Carron Company. On the Avon, in the parish of Minravonside, are the ruins of an old nunnery, founded by Malcolm IV., and half a mile west are the remains of the ancient castle of Almond, for several generations the favourite seat of the Earls of Callendar. Acreage of the parish, 1,774. Population in 1881, 3,271, and in 1891, 2,226.

The parish of POLMONT is one of the richest and most beautiful districts in the county, with little exception, being arable land, finely enclosed and planted; it has the river Avon on its eastern boundary, and is intersected by the main road from Edinburgh to Falkirk, and by the Union canal on the south, and the Firth of Forth on the north. The parish, which extends five miles inland from the Forth, is about two miles in breadth, and has within its limits several coal mines, and abounds in iron and freestone. There is a large private school here, called Blairlodge, conducted on public principles, with accommodation for over 800 boarders. The school stands in its own grounds of 30 acres. A chapel to accommodate about 500 has recently been erected in connection with the school, and there is also a hospital within the grounds. The village of Polmont lies on the road to Falkirk, and from whence it is three miles and a half to the east. The small village of NETHER POLMONT is situated on the coast from Falkirk to Bo'ness, from which it is four miles distant. Acreage of the parish, 5,512. Population in 1881, 3,955, and in 1891, 4,709.

REDDING is a district situated in the parish of Polmont, abounding in coal mines, all of which are worked by the Redding Coal Company; there are two schools and a chapel for Methodists. Nobel's Explosives Co., Limited, have large works here for the manufacture of detonators for their dynamite. The company also make vitriol and other chemicals on a large scale. Population is in part returned with Polmont.

FINTRY,

A VILLAGE in the parish of its name, is 41 miles w. from Edinburgh, 16 w.s.w. from Stirling, and 18 n. from Glasgow; bounded on the north by Balfon and Gargunnoch; on the east by St. Ninians and Kilsyth; on the south by Campsie; and on the west by Killearn and Strathblane; extending from east to west 6 miles, and in breadth, from north to south, averages about 5 miles. It is pleasantly situated north of the Campsie Fells, and admirably calculated for a seat of manufactures from its healthful site and the abundant supply of water; the deficiency of coal, however, is a formidable obstacle to the establishment of works of magnitude, the nearest point from which this indispensable article can be obtained being at the distance of at least 8 miles. Both the Endrick and the Carron rivers have their source in this district, and in their course through it form several romantic falls, among which is the celebrated Loup of Fintry, a cataract of the Endrick descending 91 feet; and on the Carron is another about 112 feet, called the "Auchinilly Linn Spout." Near the village of Fintry is a hill called the "Dun," on which is a range of perpendicular basaltic columns, some 50 feet in length; among them may be observed several without any joints; altogether they form an attractive object, and are much visited by tourists. The only place of worship is the Established church, which stands at the Cluchan, nearly a mile east from the village.

 Acreage of the parish, 13,772. Population in 1881, 414, and in 1891, 557.

GRANGEMOUTH

IS a busy and thriving seaport in the parish of Falkirk, 3 miles n.
 from that town, 27 n.n.w. from Edinburgh, and 25 n.e. from Glasgow. It is situated on the Firth of Forth, at the junction of the river Carron with the Clyde and Forth canal. The formation of this place was commenced in 1777 by Sir Lawrence Dundas, for the accommodation of the shipping passing through the canal to and from the Clyde and Glasgow, of which it is the natural eastern port. It is now a place of importance, and displays the enterprise of the British merchant in an eminent degree by its numerous and commodious quays, granaries, and warehouses for goods, and its capacious wet docks and basins for timber. It has also shipbuilding yards, a graving dock, and timber yards. Rope and sail making is extensively carried on, and there are saw mills and large collieries adjacent. The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Bank of Scotland have branches here. There are two public schools. The town having adopted the Free Libraries Act, the Victoria Library was erected in 1837, at a cost of about £1,800, including site, one half of the sum being presented by Mrs. Carnegie, the other being raised by assessment. The wet dock, opened in 1843, affording room for nearly 20,000 tons of shipping, being found too small for the trade, additional dock accommodation was added. The growth of the port is no doubt attributable to the very moderate rate of charges, as well as to the facilities for vessels of the largest tonnage to enter the docks.
 The canal rates of toll are also very low, and an abundant supply of lighters is always in the port. The area of basins for timber exceeds 17 acres. New docks were opened on the 3rd of June, 1882.
 The ground acquired for their construction amounted to nearly sixty acres, and nineteen and a half acres of this is the water area of the new docks and timber basins, the actual dockage area being about ten and a half acres. A movement is at present on foot for increased dock accommodation, the arrivals for 1891 amounting to 2,590, with a registered tonnage of close upon 1,000,000. On the same date as the opening of the docks, a new park, which covers eight and a half acres, kindly granted by the Marquis of Zetland, was thrown open to the inhabitants. A branch railway, which joins the North British at Falkirk, was formed in 1859, thus putting the port in connection with the railway system of the country. The Caledonian Railway Company have also a branch line, which joins the Scottish Central section at Lerbort. There are large imports of timber, grain, flax, &c., from Norway, Denmark, America, Prussia, and the Baltic in general, besides a considerable coasting trade.

 Steamers ply regularly to and from London, Rotterdam, Hamburg, Stettin, Dunkirk, Copenhagen, Middlesbro', &c. The advantages and cheapness of the port, and the readiness of communication by canal and railway with the populous manufacturing districts, and with inexhaustible supplies of iron and coal, combine to invest Grangemouth with unrivalled advantages for the above imports and of other continental produce, as well as for the export of the mineral and other productions of the west of Scotland. Near the canal stands Kerse House, the seat of the Marquis of Zetland. There are an Established church, two Free churches, and an United Presbyterian church. The Town Hall was erected a few years since, at a cost of about £5,500, the large hall of which is capable of seating 900 persons. There are also included in the building town clerk's chambers, council room, and small halls for meetings of committees, &c. The population of Grangemouth in 1881 was 4,424, and in 1891, 5,890.

KILLEARN.

KILLEARN is a village in the parish of its name, 50 miles w. from Edinburgh, 20 s.w. from Stirling, and nearly 17 n. by w. from Glasgow, situate on the river Endrick, almost in the centre of the district, and in a pleasant part of the country. The parish is 12 miles long by an average breadth of 2½ miles, the river, with the parish of Balfour, forming its northern boundary. It is bounded on the east by Fintry, on the south by Strathblane, and on the west by Drymen. Gentlemen's seats and pleasure grounds abound throughout the parish; and these, with the surrounding highly picturesque scenery, render the aspect of the locality most agreeable. Considerable interest is also attached to this part of the country as having been the birthplace or residence of men eminent in the biography of Scotland. In its more secluded recesses Sir William Wallace was known to have occasionally found a retreat. It has an additional claim to the attention of the literary world from being indisputably
the birthplace of George Buchanan, the celebrated poet and historian, whose name is deservedly famous all over Europe. He was born at a place called the Moss, a small farmhouse on the bank of the Water of Blane, about two miles from the village of Killearn; and was for a long period possessed by persons of the name of Buchanan.
A beautiful monument of white freestone was erected in the village, by the gentlemen of the parish and neighbourhood, in honour of the memory of their eminently gifted countryman. It is a well-proportioned obelisk, 19 feet square at the base, and 103 feet in height above the ground. The expense of its erection was defrayed by voluntary subscription, and it has recently been renovated and enclosed by iron railings, and the ground round about improved. The village has been furnished with a supply of water by Alexander Buchanan, Esq. The church, a very handsome structure, was built by Sir Archibald Orr Ewing, Bart., of Ballikilrain, in memory of his daughter, at a cost of £8,000, and presented to the parish. The old church is now used as a public hall. The land of the parish is fertile, and is watered by the Endrick and the Blane. The minerals in the district are chiefly limestone and freestone, and beautiful specimens of jasper are occasionally met with among the fragments of basaltic columns which abound here. The woods produce great numbers of indigenous plants. Acreage of the parish, 15,370. Population in 1881, 1,151, and in 1891, 1,182, the village containing 354 of that number.

KILSYTH,

AND THE VILLAGE OF BANTON.

KILSYTH is a considerable town and burgh in the parish of its name, 35 miles w. from Edinburgh, 15 s.s.w. from Stirling, between 12 and 18 N.E. from Glasgow, nearly 12 w. by s. from Falkirk, and 4 N.W. from Cumbernauld; situated on the main road leading to the three first-named places. It is a straggling and irregularly built place; a considerable proportion of the inhabitants are employed in weaving for Glasgow houses and resident manufacturers. The parish is abundantly stocked with coal and ironstone, vast quantities of the latter being supplied to the Carron Iron Works, near Falkirk, and to Gartsherrie and Woods, near Coatbridge. The district is about seven miles in length, and three and a half in breadth. In form the parish is an irregular oblong, bounded by St.
Ninian and Fintry on the north, Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch on the south, Denny on the east, and Campsie on the west. It is watered by the Carron and Kelvin rivers; it also contains one of the reservoirs of the Forth and Clyde Canal. In 1637, near the village of Kilsyth, the Covenanters, commanded by General Baillie, were defeated by Montrose. Kilsyth formerly gave the title of viscount to the unfortunate family of Livingston, attained in 1715 for their attachment to the house of Stuart; in the burial place of this family

the bodies of the last Lady Kilsyth and her infant son lay embalmed for many years. About the middle of the parish is a hill which exhibits a fine specimen of basaltic columns. Railway communication with Glasgow was opened here in 1878, through the Blane Valley section of the North British line. Besides the parish church there are places of worship for members of the Free church, the United Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Branches of the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established in the town, also a Savings Bank. A Justice of the Peace court is held every Monday.
Fairs are held on the first Friday in April, and the third Friday in November. Acreage of the parish, 15,121. Population in 1881, 6,340, and in 1891, 7,415; the town numbering 6,064.

BANTON and HIGH BANTON are small villages, situate about 2½ miles N.E. of Kilsyth, in that parish, and about 6 s.w. from Denny. A parish church is at Banton, and also a public school.

KIPPEN,

WITH THE PARISH OF GARGUNNOCK, AND THE VILLAGE OF BUCHLYVIE.

KIPPEN is a village 10 miles W. from Stirling, situate in the eastern part of the parish of its name. The parish is 8 miles in length by from 2 to 4 in breadth, and is bounded on the north by the river Forth, on the east by Gargunnoch, on the south by Balfour, and on the west by the parish of Drymen. It lies partly in the county of Stirling and partly in that of Perth, being well watered, and from some of the higher grounds an extensive and varied prospect, including Stirling Castle and the romantic woody eminences adjacent, is presented. Kippen village possesses two churches—an elegant one belonging to the Establishment, and a Free church. Near the railway station is the historically celebrated Ford of Frew, where in 1746 Prince Charles lost his cannon, while retreating before the Campbells. Mineral wells are situated in the neighbourhood. A quarry of red stone is also near the village. Fairs are held at Kippen on the second Wednesday in December, and at Balfour, a moor about two miles from Kippen, for horses, cattle and sheep on the Friday before the 26th June. Acreage of the parish, 11,256. Population in 1881, 1,500; in 1891, 1,495; and of the village, 425.

BUCHLYVIE is a village in the parish of Kippen, situated 5½ miles W. by S. th-refrom, and contains three places of worship, a quoad sacra church belonging to the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church. A branch of the Bank of Scotland is also in the village. From PORT OF MONTEITH station the tourist may proceed to the lake of Monteith, in which are situated the islands of Inchmahome and Falla, on the former of which are the ruins of a large monastery, founded by King Eibert, in 825. Many historical associations are connected with it, among which may be mentioned that Queen Mary retired thither after the battle of Pinkie, and planted a boxwood tower, a part of which still remains. It was here that Sir Walter Scott conceived the idea of writing his "Lady of the Lake." Ardgibbon Glen, much frequented for the grandeur of the scenery, is in the neighbourhood. Fairs are held in Buchlyvie on the 26th of June and 18th of November. Population in 1881, 319, and in 1891, 331.

GARGUNNOCK is a parish which extends 6 miles in length by 4 in breadth; bounded on the east and south by St. Ninians, on the west by Fintry, Balfour, and Kippen, and on the north by Kincairdine and Kilmadock. As regards its agricultural features and capabilities, it is divided into two districts; one of which, on the south, is hilly and pastoral, and the other is a flat carse land which spreads from the town of Stirling, in a south-westerly direction, towards the county of Dumbarton. The chief business here is basket making, and there is also a distillery. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are in the village, which stands on the side of a hill on the south edge of the carse alluded to, about 4 miles E. from Kippen. The river Forth divides the parish from Perthshire. Acreage, 9,859; population in 1881, 698, and in 1891, 674.

LARBERT,

AND THE VILLAGE OF STENHOUSEMUIR.

LARBERT, or Larbet, is a parish, the village, 3 miles w. from Falkirk, and 8 s.s.e. from Stirling, being beautifully situated on the side of a hill, on the northern bank of the Carron. The parish contains some gentlemen's seats of the first class, among which is Kinnaird, once the residence and property of Bruce, celebrated for his travels in Abyssinia, who was born and died in this parish; his remains are interred in the parish churchyard, and a monument of iron, cast at Carron, is erected over his grave. At the Reformation, an ancestor of this enterprising traveller repaired the old church.
 The present place of worship is a handsome modern erection, with a square tower. A new Board school has recently been erected at a cost of £1,500. Near this place the great Roman road or causeway passes, and about a quarter of a mile to the west the foundation of a bridge is visible when the Carron river is low. The famous Falkirk cattle trust is held on a moor in this parish in October, when 20,000 to 30,000 head of cattle and great numbers of sheep are exposed for sale.
 Close to Larbert station are the works of Messrs. Dobbie, Forbes & Co.,
 and Messrs. Jones & Cam'bell, for the manufacture of stoves, grates, ranges, &c. The Established church is in the village, and there is a public Board school. Acreage of the parish, 3,963. Population in 1881, 6,346, and in 1891, 8,340, the village having 926 of that number.

STENHOUSEMUIR is a small and neat village, situated about half a mile east of Larbert, in the same parish, and contains a Free church.
 A Board school has recently been erected at a cost of about £8,000.
 Another half mile distant is the hamlet of NORTH BROOMAGE, near which is the Scottish National Institution for the Education of Imbecile Children—a handsome building in the style of the continental ecclesiastical architecture. Here careful and skilful tuition, varied as each case demands, succeeds in imparting a useful education to and unfolding the inherent capabilities of many children of deficient intellect, on whom ordinary training would be inefficient.
 It is sustained partly by donation and partly by fees which are paid by the more wealthy parents. Near this institution is the Stirling District Lunatic Asylum for the counties of Stirling, Dumbarton, Linlithgow and Clackmannan. Population of Stenhousemuir in 1891, 3,045.

LENNOXTOWN AND CLACHAN OF CAMPSIE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF BALDERNOCK, CAMPSIE, STRATHBLANE, MILTON OF CAMPSIE, AND TORRANCE.

LENNOXTOWN (or Newtown of Campsie) is a large village in the parish of Campsie, 43 miles w. from Edinburgh, 23 s.s.w. from Stirling, and 9 n. from Glasgow, and is a station on the Blane Valley branch of the North British railway. In the village is the extensive calico printing establishment of Messrs. R. Dalglish, Falconer & Co. and the Hurlst & Campsie Alum Works; and in the vicinity are bleachfields and collieries. There is a comfortable hotel within one minute's walk from the railway station. A sheriff court for the recovery of small debts is held at the Lennox Arms Hotel on the second Wednesday in February, May, August and November. An Established church, with a square tower, is situated in a commanding position near the centre of the village; there are also neat places of worship belonging to the Free Church, the United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. Several schools are attached to these places of worship. The parish of Campsie lies in the central part of the county, and extends eight miles in length by seven in breadth. It is bounded on the north by the parish of Fintry, by Baldernock and Strathblane on the west, on the south by Cadder and Kirkintilloch, and on the east by Kilsyth. It is composed of a fertile strath or valley, bounded by ranges of the Campsie hills or fells on the north, which are elevated about 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. The Clachan, or town, of Campsie, as it is designated, is distant rather more than a mile from Lennoxtown, and stands on the low grounds at the foot of the far-famed Campsie glen, which from its romantic scenery and waterfalls is a place of great resort in the summer. The district is the residence of several persons of distinction, and ornamented by some elegant seats; those of Woodhead, Craigbarney and Glorat are perhaps the most conspicuous. The rivers Kelvin and Glazart pass through this parish, which is intersected by the two great roads from Kippen to Glasgow and from the latter city to Edinburgh. Population in 1881, 3,249, and in 1891, 3,000.

The small village of TORRANCE, in the parish of Campsie, or, as it is generally called, the Torrance of Campsie, is about 8½ miles from Lennoxtown, on the direct road to Glasgow, and has a station on the Kelvin Valley line of railway.

BALDERNOCK, a parish (anciently Bathernock), is situated in the southern extremity of the county. It is bounded by the river Kelvin and Allander on the side fronting north-east, and by Campsie; and on the south-west lies the loch of Baldernie. The parish abounds with cairns and similar memorials of early warfare. The most remarkable of its antiquities is a structure denominated "the auld wife's lift;" it consists of three stones, two of which are laid on the earth close by the side of each other, and on the top of this the third is placed, in the same direction, with their ends pointed to the north and south; the whole are 18 feet in length by 11 in breadth and 7 ft in depth. In the surrounding grounds the roots and stumps of oak trees have been dug up, and there can be no doubt of this spot having once been a Druidic grove and place of sacrifice. Acreage of the parish, 4,322; population in 1881, 569, and in 1891, 553.

STRATHBLANE parish, as its name implies, composes the vale of the river Blane, which pursues a north-western course through it; the land of the valley is exceedingly fertile, and is embellished by several neat villas, while the hills are clothed with natural woods. The parish lies in the south-west corner of the county, and is bounded on the east by the parish of Campsie; on the south by Baldernock and East Kilpatrick; and on the west and north by Kilmlearn. The village of Strathblane is $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west from the Clachan of Campsie, and 5 east from Kilmlearn. There are the extensive calico printing works of the Blanefield Printing Company, situated in the vale. About one mile to the west are the ruins of Duntrach Castle, and two miles south-east are the ruins of Mugdock Castle, the property of the Duke of Montrose. Acreage, 9,068; population in 1881, 1,343, and in 1891, 1,671.

MILTON (or Milton of Campsie, as it is generally called) is a small village situated two miles east of Lennoxton, in the parish of Campsie. There are two printworks in the neighbourhood. The village contains an established Church and a public school, and there is a station on the Campryce branch railway. Population in 1881, 555, and in 1891, 550.

ST. NINIANS AND BANNOCKBURN,

WITH CAMBUSBARRON, EAST PLEAN, AND WHINS OF MILTON.

ST. NINIANS is a considerable village in the parish of its name, now incorporated with Stirling, about one mile from Stirling, situate on the road from that town to Glasgow. The form of the parish is irregular; in extent, it may be computed at about ten miles from east to west, and about six miles from north to south, bounded on the east by the parish of Arth, on the south by Larbert, Dunipace, and Denny, on the west by Fintry and Gargunock, on the north by the river Forth, which separates it from Kincardine, Leacroft, Logie and Alloa (if a small space occupied by the parish of Stirling be excepted). It derives its name from the patron saint of the ancient parish church, the steeple of which still remains, and is a distinguished curiosity. The church to which this fabric was formerly attached being used as a powder magazine by the Highlanders in 1746, was accidentally blown up immediately before their retreat to the north. Though scarcely one stone of the body of the church was left upon another, the steeple remained uninjured. The town consists of one long and rather narrow street, the houses of which are curious and old fashioned; upon many are dates of considerable antiquity, and some of them have stones upon which various characters and implements are rudely and grotesquely carved. The dwellings, however, are for the most part white-washed, which imparts a lively appearance to the place; and well-cultivated grounds and thriving plantations abound in the vicinity. The places of worship are Established, Free, and United Presbyterian churches. There is also a Board school. St. Ninians has long been famed for the manufacture of nails; other staples are the tanning of leather and the manufacture of screw bolts. Acreage of the parish, 88,012; population in 1881, 10,423; in 1891, 9,571.

BANNOCKBURN is a prosperous manufacturing village in the parish of St. Ninians, one mile from that place, situate on both sides, but chiefly on the east bank, of the Bannockburn rivulet, which here runs through a glen, and after a course of a few miles falls into the Forth. Few places of its size in Scotland have more rapidly improved of late years, in consequence of the manufactures that have taken their seat here; these consist of tweeds, tartans, and carpets to a considerable extent. Coal is obtained in the vicinity in great abundance, and a tannery has been established in the village for a long period. In this district the country is characterised by long descending braes, with a northern exposure to the Forth of Forth, and it was one of these uplands, between this village and that of St. Ninians, that was fought, on the 24th of June, 1314, the memorable and decisive battle of Bannockburn, the result of which was the permanent security of the independence of Scotland. In this conflict the army of the English was defeated with a loss of thirty thousand men and seven hundred knights. Bruce's forces were stationed along the front of an eminence called Gillies Hill, and extended from south-west to north-east, between the farm of Greysteil and the village of St. Ninians. About half a mile south from the latter, upon the summit of a commanding elevation called Calden Hill, is a large stone, termed the "Bored Stone," having a hole in the top in which the Scottish king inserted his standard on the day of battle. The height called the Cat Craig Hill, from which the English king watched the progress of the battle, has been almost quarried away. About half a mile from the village of Bannockburn, at MILTON, is pointed out the remains of the miller's house to which James III. retreated from the battle of Sauchieburn, fought in 1488, about two miles further to the south-west. The places of worship are the Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. There are two schools in the village, one being under the Board and the other an endowed school. There has recently been erected a large public hall, at a cost of £1,700. There is a railway station at Bannockburn, distant half a mile from the village. Two fairs are held in Bannockburn—on the second Tuesday in June and October (old style). Bannockburn, with Muir, contained a population in 1881 of 4,831, and in 1891, 3,620.

CAMBUSBARRON is a village in the parish of St. Ninians, situate one mile north-west from that place, and about the same distance west from Stirling. Extensive woollen mills, belonging to Messrs. R. Smith and Son, give employment to the majority of the inhabitants. There is a Free church here, and Board schools were erected in 1875, at a cost of £4,000. Population returned with the parish.

About three miles from Bannockburn is the village of EAST PLEAN, containing a hospital for the accommodation of old and infirm men, more especially soldiers and sailors. Colonel Francis Simpson, of East Plean, who died in 1831, was the donor, having bequeathed upwards of £30,000 and an estate for the purpose. The establishment contains forty-eight inmates, who are fed, clothed, and have a small allowance of pocket money; the trustees granted the land on which a church has been erected in connection with the Church of Scotland.

SLAMANNAN WITH AVONBRIDGE.

SLAMANNAN is a parish lying on the south bank of the river Avon, extending along the margin of that stream for about five miles, and is from three to four in breadth. The village, which contains a branch of the Bank of Scotland, is seven miles s.w. from Falkirk. There is a station close to the place on a branch of the North British line. On the southern boundary of the district is a small lake called Black Loch, which is a tributary to the great reservoir for the Forth and Clyde Canal. Near the north-west end of the parish there is a point where the three shires of Stirling, Dumbarton and Lanark meet, and at the south-west end the shires of Stirling and Lanark meet with that of Linlithgow. The whole neighbourhood abounds in collieries, but the surface is composed principally of bog, moss, &c. There are a few dairy farms in the parish. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for the Wesleyans. There is a school here under the management of the School Board, and one belonging to the Free Church. Acreage of the parish, 7,062; the latter population in 1881, 5,850, and in 1891, 6,700, the village containing 1,727 of that number.

AVONBRIDGE is a small village partly in the parish of Slamannan and partly in that of Muiravonside, four miles from Slamannan and about seven s.e. from Falkirk. It contains two places of worship, one belonging to the Evangelistic Union, and the other to the United Presbyterians. There is a Board school here, which is managed by the combined boards of Slamannan and Muiravonside. The station, which is on the Slamannan branch of the North British line, is close to the village. Population and acreage returned with Slamannan.

STIRLING,

CAMBUSKENNETH, NEWHOUSE, CAUSEWAYHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STIRLING is an ancient town, the capital of the county and parish of its name, and a royal and parliamentary burgh; 85 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 28 n. by e. from Glasgow, 38½ s.w. from Perth, 11 n.w. from Falkirk, 7 w. from Alloa, and 6 s. from Dunblane. Like the old town of Edinburgh, Stirling is situated on the sloping ridge of a rock, the precipitous end of which, towards the west, is occupied by the castle. The prospects from hence are most delightful and extensive; towards the east, especially, they are enhanced by the windings of the Forth, the ruins of the Abbey of Cambuskenneth, the tower of which has been renovated and ornamented at great expense, the Abbey Craig, with Wallace's monument on the summit, and the city of Edinburgh in the distance. While the situation of Stirling is thus one of the most pleasing and picturesque in the country, it is a place noted for its antiquities and the historical associations connected with them. The origin of the name of Stirling is surrounded by great uncertainty. In all the old records it is entitled Stryveline or Stryveling, a word of obscure etymology, which has been modified into Sterling and Stirling—the latter is now its accepted appellation. The town standing as it does on the declivity of a hill, the streets are in general clean; the principal devoted to business being King street, Port street, Murray place, Barnton street, and Baker street. As was the case with Edinburgh, Stirling arose as a suburb in contiguity with the castle. The latter stands on a basaltic rock, and around it is a pleasant walk, carried from the town, in many places cut out of the solid rock; from this walk are several very interesting views, and it affords an excellent opportunity for examining the basaltic pillars of which the rock is composed. On the south side of the castle is a flat enclosed piece of ground, called the "Valley;" it was the spot where tournaments were held, and on one side is a place where the ladies used to sit to witness the feats of valour of the combatants, which is still designated the "ladies' rock." This piece of ground is tastefully laid out as a cemetery, and is quite in keeping with the beautiful scenery by which it is environed; it contains several handsome monuments, chiefly to the martyrs of the Reformation. On the low ground immediately below this rock is situated the "King's garden," a moderate-sized field, completely surrounded by a canal, now filled up, in the midst of which is a curious artificial mound of octagonal form called the "King's knot," which appears to have been a miniature of a regularly fortified place, but which tradition recognises as the scene of some forgotten play or recreation, which the king with his court, was accustomed to enjoy here. The palace, within the castle walls, is a stately structure, externally in the form of a square, and very richly and curiously ornamented with grotesque figures standing upon pillars or pedestals in good preservation. For several centuries Stirling Castle was little else than a single tower; at the end of the 11th century it rose into consequence, and in the course of the succeeding century it attained the distinction of being one of the four principal fortresses in the kingdom. Such it continued during the sanguinary and protracted contest which Edward I. of England waged for the subjugation of Scotland, when it was frequently taken and re-taken, after tedious sieges, and under circumstances which prove its great strength and importance at that period. In the course of that eventful struggle between independence and usurpation, Stirling and its vicinity formed the theatre of some of the most brilliant achievements of Sir William Wallace; of these none were so remarkable as the battle of Stirling, fought on the 13th of September, 1297, in which the English army was signally defeated with great slaughter, and the eventual battle of Bannockburn, fought by Robert the Bruce, on the 24th of June, 1314. Stirling Castle first became a favourite residence of royalty about the reign of James I., whose son, James II., was born in it. In the reign of Queen Anne the fortifications of the castle were considerably extended; and it is declared in the articles of the treaty of union with England to be one of the four fortresses in Scotland which were ever after to be kept in repair. Since that period it has experienced little change in external aspect, except being gradually rendered more and more a modern barracks for the accommodation of soldiers. It is commanded by a lieutenant-colonel, and has a chaplain and a barrack master, who is likewise storekeeper. Perhaps one of the most interesting places in the castle is a room in the west building of the quadrangle, known as the "Douglas Room," so called from being the apartment in which William, eighth earl of Douglas, was killed by a dagger by the hand of King James II. On the evening of the 18th of November, 1855, it was almost destroyed by fire, but since it has been as nearly as possible restored to its original appearance.

Stirling as a royal burgh is one of high antiquity, having received its charter from Alexander I. in 1119. It is governed by a provost, who is also high sheriff, the only provost in Scotland holding this important office, four bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, and 14 co. incillors, who are elected according to the terms of the Scottish Burgh Reform Act, which has also enlarged the limits of the burgh in so far as the parliamentary elective franchise is concerned, and for that purpose it comprehends St. Ninians and other small villages and hamlets. The burgh, in conjunction with Calrossie, Queensferry, Inverkeithing and Dunfermline, returns one member to Parliament. The present representative is the Right Hon. Henry Campbell-Bannerman. Being the county town, the courts of the sheriff are held here, and are attended by a number of procurators resident in the place. The chief manufactures of Stirling are carpets, tartans, tweeds, winceys and shawls, for which it has been long noted, and these branches engage a considerable number of weavers. The other leading avocations are tanning, ironfounding and agricultural implement making, a large wool factory, two carriage building establishments, and three perambulator and iron bedstead manufactories. There are seven banking establishments settled here. They are branches respectively of the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Co. Bank, besides a National Security Savings Bank. The principal hotels are the Golden Lion in King street, the Royal Hotel in Barnton place, Dowdy's Temperance Hotel, Lennox's Station Hotel, and the Douglas Hotel, in Murray place, and the Star in Baker street—all combining comfort and economy with strict attention to the wants of visitors. Some shipping trade is carried on, and during the summer river steamers from Leith afford a cheap, expeditious and agreeable communication with Edinburgh.

There has sprung up in Southfield and Spittal's Park, the property of Spittal's Hospital, what may be called the west end of the town. A large area is covered with beautiful urban villas, squares and crescents, and these all being in the immediate neighbourhood of the King's park, render them very pleasant places of residence. The approaches to the town, on every side, are truly grand, and probably equalled by few and excelled by none in Scotland. Large sums have been expended on the main streets—and to good purpose—for few towns are better paved, or lighted with purer gas, than Stirling. It is also well supplied with excellent water, brought to the town, from a distance of about three miles; so that Stirling is perhaps one of the most pleasant towns for residence, as well as one of the most beautiful, in the kingdom. The old Town House, which stands in Broad street, has a tower, with a clock and a set of musical chimes. Behind it is the gaol. New County Court houses have been built in Viewfield place, in a substantial and elegant style, opposite to which is a handsome granite fountain, erected in honour of her Majesty's jubilee. At the top of King street is the Athenæum, an edifice with a fine lofty spire and a clock which has four dials; the ground flat is occupied as shops, and the upper flat contains the council chambers and town clerk's offices; the front of the building is circular, thus giving a much greater facility of entrance to the two streets which branch out here. The Smith Institute, in Dumbarton road, erected in 1873, is a stone building, with portico front; it was founded by the late Thomas S. Smith, Esq. of Glasgow, at a cost of £5,000, who also left sufficient funds for its future maintenance; the town gave the site. The building embraces a reading room, library, museum and picture gallery, all of which are open to the public free, the provost and others being appointed trustees. The Stirling Tract Depot, erected at considerable cost, is situated in Dumbarton road, and forms a very imposing addition to the already large number of fine buildings in this road. The Corn Exchange, situated near the Athenæum, a large structure used as market place, was formerly the principal hall for public meetings, concerts, &c. In 1832, the Arcade, a glass roofed thoroughfare between Murray place and King street, was built. It contains the Douglas Hotel, a number of shops, and two halls, the Town Hall, seated for 1,100, and licensed for stage plays, and the Lesser Arcade Hall for smaller meetings. In 1883 a new public hall was erected in Albert place by the Stirling Public Halls Company, Limited. This handsome building, designed by Mr. William Simpson, jun. architect, Stirling, cost about £12,000, and contains a large hall, fitted with ample stage accommodation for dramatic performances, for which there is a license, and seated for 1,400 persons; and a smaller hall, seated for 300, with retiring and cloak rooms and keeper's apartments. The large hall contains a magnificent organ, built by Willis, London, at a cost of £2,300.

There are four Established churches, four Free, three United Presbyterian and one Episcopal and chapels for Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregational and Roman Catholic sects. The East and West congregations of the Establishment worship in Greyfriars, a fine old building near the Castle. The North church, in the Norman style of architecture, is situated in Murray place, where also is the Free North church, with a fine spire. Holy Trinity church, in Albert place, is another neat edifice, with a beautiful organ. A monument in the Grecian style of architecture, was erected at a cost of upwards of £500, in front of the United Presbyterian church, St. John street, in memory of the Rev. Ebenezer Erskine, one of the first seceders from the Establishment. In 1856, a poor house, hospital and lunatic asylum were erected at a cost of £7,000. Stirling has long been celebrated for its schools and hospitals; some of the latter are foundations of long standing, and are well endowed—their titles and localities will be found under their appropriate heads at a subsequent page. Several newspapers are issued from the press of this town every week, namely, the Stirling Observer, the Stirling Journal and Advertiser, the Bridge of Allan Gazette, Bridge of Allan Reporter, and Stirling Sentinel. They are papers of considerable repute, and deservedly enjoy a large share of patronage. Stirling, long the seat of Scottish Kings and the classic site of the most interesting scenes in Scottish history, is now the peaceful centre of the richest and best cultivated district in Scotland.

Three miles from Stirling are the mineral springs of AIRTHEY, the chief saline waters in Scotland, containing 47½ grains of common salt in 16oz., and nearly a similar amount of muriate of lime. They are situated at Bridge of Allan, now a large and thriving village, containing many elegant mansions and villas, and which will be found noticed on a preceding page. On the 24th of November, 1877, a monument to King Robert the Bruce, occupying a commanding position in front of Stirling Castle and overlooking the battlefields of Stirling and Bannockburn, was unveiled by Lady Alexander. A weekly market is held at Stirling on Friday. The fairs are held on the first Friday in February, for horses; the last Friday in May, for cattle and horses; the first Friday in March, April, May, and August, for cattle; the third Friday in October and the second Friday in December, for hiring servants. According to the returns for 1881, the town of Stirling contained a population of 16,012, and in 1891, 16,974.

CAMBUSKENNETH is a small village in the parish of Logie, county of Clackmannan, situated opposite to Stirling, on the north side of the river Forth, on one of the peninsulas formed by the windings of the river, near to which is the tall and desolate ruin of Cambuskenneth Abbey, founded by David I., in 1147, and once a pile of great magnitude. Within the precincts of the Abbey James III. and his queen were interred. During some excavations made among the ruins the royal remains were discovered and were afterwards re-interred, and a beautiful tombstone, erected at the expense of her Majesty, marks the spot.

CAUSEWAYHEAD is a small village in the parish of Logie, about midway between Bridge of Allan and Stirling, situated in the counties of Stirling and Clackmannan, and at the foot of Abbey Craig—a detached portion of the Ochil range—which presents a precipitous front of about 560 feet above the level of the Forth. On its most elevated ridge, and almost perpendicularly over the village, stands Wallace's monument. It is in the form of a Scotch baronial tower, surmounted by a crown, and is 220 feet in height. The foundation stone was laid June 24th, 1861 (the anniversary of the Battle of Bannockburn), with masonic honours, by the Duke of Athole. From the summit, which is reached by a spiral stair, the view is rich in natural beauty and historic associations. Population in 1881, 370.

SUTHERLANDSHIRE.

This is a Highland county, and one of the most northerly districts in Scotland. Its form presents five sides, that on the east being bounded by Caithness-shire for about thirty-seven miles, that on the south and south-west by Ross-shire, that on the south and south-east, for a distance of thirty-three miles, by the Moray Firth, and its sides on the west and north are washed by the Atlantic and the North Sea. From east to west it extends 62 miles, and from north to south 49 miles. It has an area of 2,027 square miles, or 1,298,459 acres, exclusive of 47,688 acres of water, 12,812 of foreshore, and 1,553 of tidal water. A small portion only of the shire is under cultivation. In size it ranks as the fifth, and in population as the twenty-eight, of the counties of Scotland.

SURFACE, SOIL, PRODUCE, &c.—This large county consists almost entirely of an uninterrupted succession of wild mountains, valleys and morasses. The northern and western coasts are bold and rocky, deeply indented by inlets of the sea and bays, and variegated by imposing promontories, among which latter Cape Wrath, at the north-western corner, is most prominent. The shire comprehends the political districts of Strathnaver (anciently a county of itself), Assynt and Sutherland, the first-named including the northern part, and the two latter the southern. The interior is divided naturally into three districts—the Eastern, the Middle and the Western. The first is a level narrow strip of land on the east coast, sheltered from the north by a ridge of mountains from three hundred to eight hundred feet high; the second is occupied by the four straths of the rivers Helmsdale, Brora, Fleet and Oykel; and the western district, which borders on the Atlantic, is still more wild and mountainous, abounding in salt and fresh water lochs. The mountains of greatest altitude in the shire are Ben More, 3,235, Ben Clebrig, 3,157, and Ben Hope, 3,040 feet above the level of the sea. The large extent of Sutherlandshire was the last district in Scotland which was subjected to the improvements of modern times. Until about the close of the last century, it was a country lying in nearly the same condition as it must have exhibited centuries before, and, in many respects, was shut out from the progress of that civilisation which had been so beneficially spread over the rest of Britain. The great barrier which impeded improvement was the dangerous narrow firths to be crossed, and the total destitution of roads, either along the shore or into the interior. Two powerfully-moving circumstances at length brought about the introduction of efficient measures of improvement. The first was the extraordinary and patriotic exertions made by the noble family of Sutherland and Stafford, and the second was the well-judged liberality of Parliament, which agreed to advance a moiety of the expense to be incurred for certain roads and bridges in the Highlands. When it was proposed to place turnpike gates on the principal line the noble proprietor said, "It will shut out the thoroughfare of passengers, of which we have too few; and, regarding the tenantry, I see no benefit in lowering rent with one hand, while with the other I impose tolls upon them." Thus, under the fostering care of the first and succeeding Dukes of Sutherland, as well as that of the late Duchess-Countess, the aspect of the county has been most agreeably changed. Breeding of sheep is the great staple business of the shire, for which its sheltered straths and finely swelling green hills, as well as its climate (which is superior to that of Caithness-shire), eminently adapt it. Under the various improvements of store farming the county rears many thousands of sheep, mostly of the Cheviot breed, of which a great number are annually exported. From the fishing stations on the coast the county annually exports immense quantities of herrings, besides cod, ling, &c. Nor is the business of tillage neglected. The agriculture of the shire in some parts is now equal to that of the Lothians, and the soil, being of a sandy, open-bottomed nature, bears excellent crops of barley, turnips, and clover. Oats are also grown, and wheat is occasionally raised, but only with moderate success. The exports of farm produce, &c. have been much assisted by the erection of piers at Helmsdale and other places on the coast, chiefly at the cost of the late Duke of Sutherland. The building of houses has been greatly facilitated by the abundance of sandstone, limestone, and slate found in different parts of the county. Coal has for many years been wrought at Brora. This county is almost devoid of manufactures, the only works being at Brora and Rogart, at which place tweeds, blankets, &c., are made. Hand looms are, however, still worked in many of the crofters' houses. The principal rivers are the Brora, Borge, Naver, Helmsdale, Halladale, Laxford, Inchard, Inver, Shin, Fleet, Strathmore, and Gruke. The only line which gives to this county railway communication is that belonging to the Highland Railway Company.

DIVISION, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Sutherlandshire comprises thirteen parishes and part of one other. It contains only one town, Dornoch, which is a royal and parliamentary burgh, joining with Kirkwall, Wick, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty in returning one representative, and the county at large sends another. The member at present sitting for the county is Angus Sutherland, Esq. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-2 numbered 2,745. In 1881 the population of the county was 23,370, and in 1891, 21,940, showing a decrease of 1,430. The valuation for 1891-2 was £98,018.

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ALTNABARRA, DURNES, EDDRACHILLIS, SCOURIE, GLENDHU, KINLOCH-BERVIE, FARR, STRATHY, ARMADALE, LAIRG, TONGUE, ACHANY, MELVICH, MELNESS, LOCHINVER, BETTY HILL, STOER, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ASSYNT is a large parish, on the Minch Channel, between Kyle Sku and Loch Enard, 20 miles w.n.w. of Lairg, with an acreage of 110,111, chiefly mountain and water. Loch Assynt in this parish is seven miles in length and one in breadth; there are also several smaller lochs. Slate, spat and marble are found in the parish. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,781.

ALTNABARRA is a village in Mid-Sutherland, 17 miles s. of Tongue, with a Free church and school.

DURNES is a part in north-west Sutherland, situated between Whitehead and Cape Wrath light; its size is in length 15 miles, in breadth 18 miles, principally hilly pasture. Lime is quarried here. The noted cave of Smoo is about a mile from Durness Inn. Acreage, 140,812. In 1881 the population was 987.

EDDRACHILLIS (or Edderachyllis) is a parish on the coast of west Sutherland, and contains the villages of SCOURIE, GLENDHU and KINLOCHBERVIE. The parish is situated between Sandwood Bay and Kyle Sku, its length being 20 miles, with a breadth of 10 miles; it is watered by Lochs More and Stack, and several smaller lochs. Acreage of the parish, 195,555. Population in 1881, 1,525.

FARR is a large mountainous parish in North Sutherland, 20 miles n.w. of Kildonan, and on the east coast between Fair Head and Strathy Head, and contains the villages of STRATHY and ARMADALE. In size the parish is 30 miles long by a breadth of about 14 miles, and embraces an area of 183,955 acres. The parish in 1881 possessed a population of 1,930.

LAIRG is a parish 22 miles n.w. of Dornoch, in South Sutherland, under Ben Clebric, and includes Loch Shin and other lakes. The size of the parish is 30 miles in length by a breadth of about 10 miles. A branch of the Caledonian Bank is established in the village. It has a commodious hotel called the Sutherland Arms Hotel, where every comfort will be found, and from whence mail coaches go to all parts of the country. Acreage of the parish, 121,358. Population in 1881, 1,355.

TONGUE is a parish in North Sutherland, 42 miles n.n.w. of Dornoch situated on the Kyle of Tongue, an arm of the sea nine miles long. The parish, which is 18 miles in length, by a breadth of about six, is watered by the rivers Borgia and Melness, together with lochs Laoghal, Craggie, Slam, Meadie, and many small lakes; it is also very mountainous, Ben Hutick being 1,840 feet, Ben Hope 3,040 feet, and Laoghal 2,504 feet above the sea level. There is a most comfortable hotel at Tongue. The parish has an area of 81,806 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,929.

ACHANY is 2 miles s. of Loch Shin, in South Sutherland.

MELVICH is a village in the parish of Reay, North Sutherland, 3 miles E. of Strathy.

LOCHINVER is near Inverloch, West Sutherland.

DORNOCH,

CLASHMORE, EMBO, AND BONAR BRIDGE IN CREICH.

DORNOCH is a small town and royal burgh, the capital of its parish, and of the county of Sutherland, 9 miles N. from Tain and 11 S.
from Golspie, healthfully and pleasantly situated near the mouth of the river Portnacoon, now generally called the Firth of Dornoch, and opposite to Tain, which lies on the south side of the estuary.
Dornoch is an ancient place, and was the residence of the bishops of Caithness even before the 12th century. The cathedral church was then erected here by Bishop Gilbert Moray; but in the year 1570, some hostile tribes of the neighbouring country took advantage of the minority of Alexander, Earl of Sutherland, made a sudden irruption into the town, and among other barbarous acts, set fire to the venerable edifice, after a desperate resistance by the inhabitants, who succeeded, however, in preserving the old tower, which still remains.
On the 5th of November, 1605 (the day of the discovery of the gunpowder plot), a range of handsome stone pillars which supported some Gothic arches that had escaped destruction, were prostrated by a violent gale of wind. In 1614 the Earl of Sutherland commenced the repair of a part of the cathedral, and subsequent alterations converted it into an ordinary plain church; but during the year 1836, the late Duchess-Countess of Sutherland restored the structure to its original dimensions and Gothic proportions; and now, with its projecting abutments and arched windows (all carefully copied from the remaining fragment of the edifice), and adorned with Gothic groinings along the lofty and long roof of the aisles, the Dornoch cathedral is the handsomest erection of its kind in the north of Scotland. The remains of a former Duke of Sutherland repose in the east aisle, where is placed a beautiful marble statue of that deeply lamented nobleman, executed by Chantrey, also a tablet to a late Duchess.
A small part of the bishop's palace still remains; but all the manses of the other dignitaries of the cathedral have disappeared, and the town has lost much of its comparative importance since the triumph of the Reformation.

Dornoch was constituted a royal burgh by Charles I. in 1628; and is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer, with four councillors. In connection with certain other burghs before named, it enjoys parliamentary representation; the present member is Sir John Pender. The trade of the town is very limited, owing chiefly to its locality at an angle of the county, and the free navigation of the Firth being obstructed by the same bar of dangerous sand banks mentioned in the account of Tain. Of late years some extensive buildings have been erected, regular and neat;
two of these are very handsome, one contains the town and county
room, sheriff clerk's room, &c.; the other the volunteer armory (formerly the town and county gaol), and also a very neat police station for the county. There is a public school. The neighbourhood of Dornoch is very pleasant, and a short distance hence are some good sea bathing stations. Within four miles, situate on the rising ground, is the neat and picturesque castle of Skelbo, erected by a former Duke of Sutherland, as a home farm and a rural retreat during the residence of His Grace in the north; it is now in the tenancy of its former manager, Mr. T. Barclay. The scenery about here is diversified, and combines the home grounds laid out with the best taste, and surrounded by distant spots alternately romantic and beautifully picturesque, with wood and water, hill and dale. The links have for centuries been famous for golfing, and, as this game is increasing in popular esteem, Dornoch is becoming a resort for golfers, and a neat golf house has been erected on the links. There are two public fairs or markets held annually in the town, on the first Tuesday in November, and the other on the first Wednesday in December. These fairs were formerly wont to be thronged by persons from distant parts of the country; but now, in consequence of the rise of small villages in different places, and the establishment of cattle markets elsewhere, they are but thinly attended. In 1881 the parish of Dornoch, which covers an area of 30,189 acres, contained a population of 2,525, and in 1891, 2,403; of this number the burgh had 514. The Mound is the nearest railway station, 7 miles distant.

CLASHMORE is a modern and thriving village, about 5 miles W. from Dornoch, situated partly on the estate of Sutherland and partly on that of Skibo, being divided only by a small burn which separates these properties, and by the parliamentary road to Caithness, which passes through the village. A neat and comfortable inn—the Sutherland Arms—affords every accommodation required by visitors. It was erected some years since by the late Duchess-Countess of Sutherland, at an expense of about £1,000. Within half a mile from the village is the beautiful seat and residence of the late Evan Charles Sutherland, Esq., of Skibo; on the site of this man-ion there formerly, for centuries, stood a castle, with a garrison, under the charge of a general officer as governor. Around it many bloody conflicts took place, but its retention having become unnecessary in these peaceful times, it was demolished, and the present castle of modern architecture erected instead. The celebrated noble and brave but ill-fated Marquis of Montrose, in the year 1650, lodged two nights as a prisoner in the Castle of Skibo, after his unfortunate defeat by the Presbyterian army near Bonar Bridge, and his subsequent capture by the avaricious and treacherous Neil Macleod, of Assynt, who basely betrayed and delivered him up to his enemies.
An extensive fair is held on the first Monday of May, at Clashmore.
The Mound is the nearest railway station, 5 miles distant. Population in 1891, 204.

BONAR BRIDGE is a considerable thriving village in the parish of Creich, 15 miles N.W. from Tain, and 13 W. from Dornoch, situate on the great north mail road, and on the north side of the Firth of Dornoch, which is here crossed by an elegant iron bridge. Here are two hotels, a branch of the Caledonian Banking Company, Limited, a large public school, a drill hall, and several substantial houses and shops. Fairs are held in the village on the second Monday in April, June, July, August, September and October. Bonar Bridge is the nearest railway station, one mile distant. Population in 1881, 819, and in 1891 836.

EMBO, a fishing village and life boat station, is 2 miles N.E. from Dornoch. The Mound is the nearest railway station, 5 miles distant.
Population in 1891, 664.

BRORA, KILDONAN, HELMSDALE, ROGART, CLYNE, AND LOTH.

GOLSPIE is a parish and village—the latter neat and respectable—11 miles N. from Dornoch, and 20 N. from Tain, pleasantly situated on the east coast of the county. Before the commencement of the present century, Golspie was principally inhabited by fishermen, but is now the most important and prosperous village in the shire. The great parliamentary road passes through it, and it is a station on the Highland railway, which connects it with Inverness. A branch of the Town and County Bank, Limited, and another of the British Linen Company, are established here. A convenient pier, accessible at low water, constructed in the safe harbour of the little ferry three miles and a half distant, is a valuable improvement to the village and its neighbourhood. The parish church a small but convenient building, erected in 1619, and kept in good repair, stands within a well enclosed burial ground, surrounded by thriving trees; and at the west end of the village the Free church is situated; schools are in connection with both these places of worship. Golspie owes its increasing prosperity to its eligible situation in the centre of the arable district, and to the direct communication established between it and the distant west and north coasts. The vicinage of Golspie is peculiarly distinguished and adorned by Dunrobin Castle, the chief and princely seat of the Duke of Sutherland, situated within a mile of the village. The castle is known to have existed in the twelfth century, and, according to old historians, it was even long before that period the family fortress of the ancient Thanes and Earls of Sutherland. Of its ancient appearance it has almost become divested, and given place to a particularly chaste and characteristic style of architecture. The principal entrance is through a long avenue of trees, terminating which the noble building bursts upon the sight. The view from the castle's summit is remarkably fine, and comprises all that give effect to a delightful landscape, including the tastefully laid out gardens and grounds, the finely-wooded burn and waterfall in Dunrobin Glen, and the picturesque mountain of Ben-Braggie, towering over all to the height of 1,900 feet. Upon the summit of this eminence has been placed a lofty monument to the memory of a former Duke of Sutherland. The interior of the castle is no less to be admired than the beauties that surround it; and the works of art with which it is decorated are various and costly, the paintings especially being of the first merit; while the apartments altogether are magnificent in their furniture and dimensions. The view from the sea likewise possesses great interest. The building from this point is seen to great advantage, exhibiting its noble tiers of balconies, and numerous spires, its windows of stained glass, its garlands and beautiful fountains, &c. Near the village a handsome memorial has been erected to the late Duchess, raised by subscription, to perpetuate the remembrance of the many virtues of that noble lady. Acreage of the parish, 19,960. Population in 1881, 1,556, and in 1891, 1,451, of the village at the latter date, 959.

BRORA is a village in the parish of CLYNE, about 12 miles S.W. from Helmsdale and 6 N.E. from Golspie. Its trade is of a domestic nature; the curing of fish employs some of the inhabitants, and there is a distillery in the neighbourhood. The parish is large, being twenty-four miles in length by from four to eight in breadth, extending inland to Strathbog, through which flows a tributary to the Brora water, a narrow and rapid stream, abounding with excellent salmon. Within the last few years great improvements have been made in this district by the late Duke of Sutherland. Coal has been found, and is at present worked to a considerable extent, and bricks and tiles are made here. There is a station here on the Highland line. The parish of Clyne has an area of 74,504 acres, and in 1891 contained a population of 1,713, of which Brora possessed 580.

HELMSDALE is a modern village in the parish of KILDONAN, 60 miles S. by W. from Wick, and 17 N.E. from Golspie; situated at the mouth of the river from which it takes its name, and on the coast road that passes northward. The houses are substantial, the streets are regular, and its harbour is excellent; during the season for the herring fishery large fleets of boats resort here. The places for curing are the most complete and the best adapted on the coast for pursuing this branch to a great extent. The river that flows through the extensive strath of Kildonan abounds with salmon. Just opposite the town stand the ruins of an old castle, which serve as a landmark to mariners. The places of worship are two churches, one of the Establishment, the other a Free church. There is also a public school. A branch of the British Linen Company Bank is established here, and there is a station on the Highland line. The parish of Kildonan, which covers an area of 184,550 acres, in 1881 had a population of 1,942, and in 1891, 1,828, of which at the latter date 686 belonged to Helmsdale.

LOTH is a parish on Dornoch Firth, 10 miles N.E. of Brora, about 14 miles in length. The last person who suffered death for reputed witchcraft was burnt here about 1720. A public school and an Established church are in the village, and there is a railway station about a mile distant. Acreage of the parish, 17,881; population in 1881, 584, and in 1891, 528.

ROGART is a parish on the Dornoch Firth, 10 miles W. from Golspie. The inhabitants, with the exception of a few employed at the woollen manufactory, are principally of the labouring class. There are an Established and a Free church in the parish, and a railway station near the village, and four public schools. Acreage 66,267; population in 1881, 1,327, and in 1891, 1,195.

WIGTOWNSHIRE.

THIS county, which forms the western part of the ancient district of Galloway, occupies the south-western extremity of Scotland.

It is bounded on the east by the stewartry of Kirkcudbright (or Eastern Galloway), also by Wigtown Bay; on the south and west it is girded by the Irish Sea, and on the north by the county of Ayr. The extent of the shire from north to south is about thirty miles, and (including Luce Bay) its breadth from east to west about the same. The superficial contents of the county (adopting a medium calculation betwixt conflicting authorities) may be taken at 480 square miles, of which about one-half, perhaps, is cultivated. The Bay of Luce indents the land to the extent of 15 miles, and forms two promontories. At the southern extremity of the western projection is the Mull of Galloway, while the apex on the eastern is called Burrow Head. These two peninsular headlands are also known by the Celtic name of the Rhinus (Rhyns or Rhynos) of Galloway. On the north of the county another promontory is formed by the intersection of Loch Ryan. In ordinary language the district is divided into Upper and Lower Galloway, which designate the northern or higher, and the southern or lower parts of the shire. Wigtownshire stands the seventeenth in point of size and the twenty-third in population of Scottish counties.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman power obtruding itself into North Britain, the ancient British tribes of the Novantes inhabited the whole of Western Galloway, having Leucophibia (the modern Whithorn) for their principal town, and Herigonium (Loch Ryan) for their principal port. The Anglo-Saxons overran the district in the sixth century, and Osway, the Northumbrian king, settled at Whithorn. During the ninth and tenth centuries the country on the west was inhabited by the Picts from Ireland and the Isle of Man, and hence the name of Galloway, or “the country of the Gael,” was conferred on the territory. About the twelfth century Galloway passed into the hands of the Scottish king Alexander II. In the sanguinary combats which originated in the competition of Bruce and Baliol, the chieftains of Galloway long remained attached to the party of the latter, whose family they sheltered after Edward Bruce had subdued the whole country. The family of Douglas subsequently became possessed of the lordship of Galloway; but, on the attainder of the nobleman of that name in 1455, the title became extinct. It was revived however, and now bestows an earldom on the distinguished family of Stewart and Garlies. The Maxwells of Nithsdale received a portion of the estates. The proximity to Ireland and the Isle of Man caused the country of the Gael to remain for a long period a separate community from the rest of Scotland, and the Gaelic dress, manners and language lingered here long after they fell into desuetude in the rest of the Lowlands. Whilst these distinctions remained, the inhabitants were conspicuous for rudeness bordering on ferocity. Their chief derived his authority sometimes from the kings of Scotland and at others from the kings of Northumbria, but neither could subdue the turbulence and insubordination of the chieftain and his vassals, who were very troublesome neighbours, making reckless incursions into the territories of those who had the misfortune to dwell in the proximity of these half-civilised marauders.

SOIL, CLIMATE, PRODUCE, &c.—This shire is one of the most level districts in Scotland; and the hills, of which there are none of great altitude, are generally pretty free from the encumbrance of rocks. The best lands lie near the shores, the inland division being more elevated, and largely mixed with heath and moss. The major part of the soil is of that kind sometimes called a dry loam, though it often inclines to a gravelly nature. The county presents an exposure to the south, and its waters mostly descend to the Irish Sea. The climate is moist, with winds from the south-west, which prevail during the greater part of the year, usually accompanied with rain; yet, when proper attention is exercised by the agriculturist, the moisture of the climate is but seldom injurious to the products of the earth. Snow rarely lies long, and frosts are not generally severe or of tedious duration. In early times this district of Galloway, like most other sections of the country, was covered with woods; and in modern days planting has been pursued most extensively. The salutary improvements that have been effected in this county have been, with some justice, ascribed to the efforts of the Agricultural Society of Dumfries. The spirit and practice of husbandry gradually spread from that shire to Kirkcudbright, and, thence, from Ayrshire, penetrated into Wigtownshire. Since that period rents have risen rapidly, and corn and other products of tillage, black cattle, wool, sheep and swine are now largely exported. This district has long been pre-eminent as being an excellent pastoral one, and for the superiority of its wool. The mineral resources of the county are by no means extensive. There is no coal, at least not for any useful purpose; and although there is plenty of iron ore, the absence of the former article renders the latter of comparatively little value. In the northern part of the Rhinns the existence of sandstone has been ascertained. Quarries of slate, of different qualities, are found in various places, and lead mines were formerly wrought within the district. The shipping trade of Wigtownshire has felt, like all maritime counties, the impetus of steam navigation. The ports of Stranraer, Wigtown, and Whithorn derive considerable benefit from this mighty power; and at one time Portpatrick was the station for the mail steam packets communicating with Ireland; the removal of which to Glasgow and Greenock has been a severe blow to the prosperity of this interesting little port. The coasting trade of the county is considerable, giving employment to a large number of mariners. In 1688 the number of boats belonging to this shire was four, while at the present time they may be numbered by hundreds. There is also considerable activity in the fisheries connected with the numerous ports and lochs. There is an almost entire absence of manufactures in this shire, if we except mills at Kirkcowan and Minnigaff, at which blankets, tweeds &c. are made. The great industry of Wigtownshire, is however, the manufacture of cheese by the farmers of the Rhinns district of the county, who have been for many years the principal prize takers for the celebrated Cheddar cheese made by them.

RIVERS AND MOUNTAINS.—This county has no considerable rivers; the principal are the Cree, the Bladnoch, and the Tarf, with a few of smaller size. The Cree, which is a boundary river between this county and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, rises in Carrick, in Ayrshire; after forming a lake at the head of Wigtownshire, it flows again as a stream, and, passing Newton Stewart on the east, falls into a creek at the head of Wigtown Bay. The Bladnoch also has its source in Carrick, and, after running a course of twenty-four miles, falls into Wigtown Bay. The Tarf issues from a small lake in Ayrshire, and, after a course of twenty-one miles, unites with the Bladnoch. The mountains, with their elevations above the level of the sea, are—Lang, 1,768 feet; Mochrum Fell, 1,020 feet; Knock of Luce, 1,014; and Barhullion, 814 feet. The Caledonian Railway offers extensive facilities for communication with other important towns and counties.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Wigtownshire comprehends seventeen parishes, and has three royal burghs, namely, Wigtown, Stranraer, and Whithorn. Prior to the Redistribution of Seats Bill, 1885, these three last-mentioned towns, in conjunction with New Galloway, returned one member to Parliament; but on the passing of that bill the representation was merged in the counties. The county sends one representative, the gentleman now sitting being Sir Herbert Eustace Maxwell, Bart. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-2 numbered 5,613. The Earl of Stair, K.T. is Lord Lieutenant of the county. The burghs of barony in the shire are Newton Stewart, Garlieston, Kirkcowan, Glenluce, and Portpatrick; it has several thriving villages, and a number of small seaports or natural harbours, and is ornamented by many handsome mansions and elegant seats of its nobility and gentry. In 1881 the population was returned as 88,611, and in 1891, 86,048; which shows a decrease of 2,563. The valuation of the county for 1891-2 was (exclusive of railways, £8,869) £203,792.

GARLIESTON AND SORBIE.

GARLIESTON is a sea-port village in the parish of Sorbie, finely situated at the head of Garlieston bay (a small haven on the west side of Wigtown bay). From the pier-head the Ross light bears S.E. by E. For distance—See Sorbie. The place is built in the form of a semicircle, facing the sea, with a safe and commodious harbour, capable of receiving a large number of vessels; the tide at the spring flow rises eighteen feet. Regular steam communication is maintained between this port and Liverpool once a fortnight, and there are traders occasionally. The broughton and Poutenburn streams, which here flow into the bay, are crossed by several bridges. Galloway House, a fine mansion, the seat of the Earl of Galloway, erected in 1740, is adjacent on the south, and at present occupied by Charles John Massey, Esq., on short lease; it is surrounded by beautiful plantations, and the grounds about it, for several miles, are extremely picturesque, and the prospects on every side delightful. Garlieston is a station on the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint railway. Population in 1881, 699, and in 1891, 587.

SORBIE (or Sorby) is a parish and village—the latter 39 miles E. by S. from Portpatrick, 30 S.E. from Strauraer, 13 S. from Newton-Stewart, and 6 S. from Wigtown; situated in a fine part of the county, and surrounded by land in a high state of cultivation. The parish is of an irregular figure, extending along the shore about 12 miles, and varying in breadth from two to six miles inland. The chief bays in the parish are Garlieston and Rigg, with the ports of Allane, Whaple, and Innerwell; these bays and ports are very convenient for shipping, and well adapted for the prosecution of the fisheries. The headlands are Cruggleton and Eagerness; upon these are the remains of two strong castles, one of which, Cruggleton Castle, gives the name to the promontory. It is believed to have been built by the Danes and Norwegians in 1038, and shortly afterwards fell into the possession of the Kerlies, or M'Kerlies, who retained possession until the Reformation. Previously, they owned Carleton, now Carleton Castle, near Girvan, which the Catbarts obtained in 1824. Cruggleton Castle is celebrated for one of the successful exploits of Sir William Wallace, the great Scottish patriot. It was taken by treachery, and Sir William retook it for his friend William Kerlie, who was thereby restored to his paternal castle and territory. This is fully mentioned in Paterson's "Wallace and Times." Eagerness was also built by the Danes, but no particular account has been handed down. About a mile to the east of the kirk are the gradually mouldering outlines of Sorbie tower, formerly belonging to the Hannay family. The Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint railway runs close by the village. The Established church, opened in 1877, is a fine Gothic structure, cruciform in shape, with tower and spire rising to a height of over 60 feet, and was erected at a cost of about £2,500. It is situated at Millisle, about one mile from Garlieston, and two from Sorbie. Sorbie belonged to a family called Sorby, now changed to Sorbie. The Hannays did not get it until a much later period. Sorbie parish, which embraces an area of 9,611 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 1,696, and in 1891, 1,563, the village containing 179 of that number.

GLENLUCE AND NEW LUCE.

GLENLUCE is a village in the parish of Old Luce, 19 miles E. from Portpatrick, 18 W. from Wigtown, 16 S.W. from Newton Stewart, and 10 E. by S. from Stranraer; situated on the banks of the river Luce, and on the public road, at the head of Luce Bay, which here forms a tolerably good harbour for small vessels. The country around is interesting and picturesque, and abounds with game of almost every kind. The church is a neat edifice, remarkable only for its simplicity; there are also a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and Board schools. About a mile to the north of the church, further up the vale (from which the village takes its name), are the ruins of Luce Abbey, founded by Rolland, Lord of Galloway, in 1190. When in its perfect state it must have been an extensive building. The vast mass of prostrate fragments at present cover about an acre and a half of ground, notwithstanding the quantities that have been carried away. The only part now remaining entire is a small apartment on the east side of the square, within which latter stood the cloisters; in the middle of this apartment stands a pillar, about fourteen feet high, from which eight arches spring; this is the Chapter House. Tradition reports Michael Scott, of cabalistic memory, to have been at one time abbot of this establishment, and adds that his magical library still exists under a particular part of the ruins; to ascertain which a person excavated part of the ground, and found many curiosities, together with several skeletons in an upright position; the explorer, however, having been seized with insanity, the search was interrupted, and the superstitions of the people prevented others from pursuing the investigation. In the Collections of the Ayrshire and Galloway Archaeological Association, Vol. V. a full description is given of the abbey, with plans. It is the seventh in the order of foundation of Cistercian abbeys in Scotland. The total length was about 180 feet.

The district is full of interest for archaeologists. The Rev. George Wilson has procured for the Museum of Antiquities, in Edinburgh, above 6,000 worked flints and many articles of the stone and bronze ages. There also a number of clay urns; and some interesting stone crosses. The Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint line runs through the town, and is joined by the Girvan line at Dunragit station. The principal hotel is the King's Arms. There is a monthly fair or market held here (for cattle) from the first Friday in April to the first Friday in December. Acreage of the parish, 31,596. Population in 1881, 2,447, and in 1891, 2,515; of the village, 939.

The village of New Luce is 5 miles N. from Glenluce, situated on the Luce, where the Cross water falls into that river. This district, which, until the year 1646 formed part of the parish of Old Luce, extends about ten miles in length by from five to six in breadth. It consists of high and low ground; of the former, the greater proportion is covered by rocks or heath; the arable land, which is not of great extent, lies principally on the banks of the rivers. The Standing Stones of Laggan have been taken in charge by the Government authorities for the conservation of ancient monuments. The parish church, a plain building, and a Free church are the places of worship; there is also a Board school. This is a station on the Girvan and Portpatrick Junction railway. New Luce parish, which embraces 28,877 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 706, and in 1891, 588.

KIRKPCOWAN.

KIRKPCOWAN is a parish and village, the latter 10 miles N.E. from Glenluce, 8 N.W. from Wigtown, and 7 S.E. from Newton Stewart, situated on the Tarf water, near its junction with the Bladenoch. There are woollen manufactories adjoining the village, belonging respectively to Messrs. William Armstrong and Son, and Mr. William Milroy, which furnish employment to many of the inhabitants. The Portpatrick and Wigtownshire Joint Railway passes within a quarter of a mile of the village. The principal hotel is the Commercial. The church, which is a very neat edifice, was erected in 1838; its site, as well as the ground occupied by the churchyard, was given by the late Captain W. C. Hamilton, of Craiglaw. There is a church for the United Presbyterians, and Board schools. The surface of this district is various, consisting of moorland, interspersed with pieces of arable land. It extends from north to south 15 miles, by a general breadth of about 5, and is well watered by the Tarf and Bladenoch streams. Acreage of the parish, 85,865; population in 1881, 1,507, and in 1891, 1,263, of which about 700 were returned for the village.

KIRKMAIDEN, DRUMMORE, STONEYKIRK,

AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of KIRKMAIDEN occupies nearly the whole of the western limb or peninsula of Wigtownshire, projecting into the mouth of the Solway Firth, and tapering to a point that inclines to the east. This parish, which comprehends the most southerly district of Scotland, is about 12 miles in length and from $1\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 miles in breadth; it still has a wild appearance, but produces good crops of corn and potatoes, and has a very large number of dairy farms. The coast is generally bold, and indented by caves scooped out by the endless operations of the sea, and particularly by its furious lashings against the opposing barrier in stormy weather; on both sides of the peninsula, however, there are several good anchoring grounds. At Portpatrick is a harbour, now in ruins, constructed at the expense of the late Andrew McDouall, Esq., then proprietor, who exerted himself to improve this locality. There is also a tolerable harbour at Drummorie; here the coast guard has a station, under the command of a chief boatman of the royal navy. Salmon and cod fishing is carried on at Drummorie. The church, a plain edifice, is situated near the centre of the parish, not far from Drummorie bay, 6 miles from the Mull of Galloway, 35 s.w. from Wigtown, 86 s.w. from Newton Stewart, 20 s.e. from Stranraer, and 16 s.e. from Portpatrick. On the estate of James McDouall, Esq., of Logan, is a fish pond well worthy the inspection of visitors; it is heven out of the solid rock, and has communication with the sea by means of an ingeniously contrived iron grating; some of the fish in this artificial reservoir have been rendered so tame that they will feed from the hand. The parish of Kirkmaiden, which embraces 13,730 acres, in 1881 contained a population of 2,409, and in 1891, 2,192. Portpatrick is the nearest railway station, 16 miles distant.

The parish of STONEYKIRK (more properly Steven's Kirk), lies in the western peninsula of the county, to the north of Kirkmaiden, 6 miles S.E. from Stranraer, and about the same distance E. from Portpatrick. On the east and south-east is the bay of Luce. The parish, which extends about 7 miles in length by from 3 to 5 in breadth, comprehends the three old parishes of Stoneykirk, Clackshant and Toskerton. The surface is generally hilly, moorish, and of a pastoral character; the low grounds are arable, and in some places planted. On the estate of Mrs. Matilda Maitland, in this district, is an artificial mound, supposed to be of Roman origin, and used as a beacon in time of war; there is likewise another of a similar kind on the estate of the late Sir John M. Taggart, of Ardwell House. The parish of Stoneykirk contains 19,480 acres; population in 1881, 2,766, and in 1891, 2,703. Stranraer is the nearest railway station, six miles distant.

NEWTON STEWART,

AND THE PARISHES OF PENNINGHAM, MINNIGAFF, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEWTON STEWART is a thriving town and burgh of barony, 121 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 82 s. from Glasgow, 52 w. from Dumfries, 26 e. from Stranraer, and 8 n. from Wigtown; situated on the high road from Dumfries to Portpatrick, on the right bank of the river Cree, in the parish of Penningham, with a small portion on the opposite side of the stream in the parish of Minnigaff. It is a station on the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire railway, and is also the junction for the Wigtownshire railway to Garlieston and Whit-horn. The town owes its origin to a younger branch of the Stewarts, Earls of Galloway, who possessed the estate of Castle-Stewart, and founded the village upon it, to which he gave the name of Newton Stewart. About the year 1778 the estate fell into the hands of William Douglas, Esq., of Carlingwark, who founded the town of Castle-Douglas, when it was created a burgh of barony, under the title of Newton-Douglas, but it subsequently resumed its original name. Formerly the houses consisted but of one story, and were covered with thatch, but the greater portion are now two storeys in height and slated. The town is principally composed of one large street, in the centre of which is the Town House. The Cree is crossed by a very handsome bridge of five arches, connecting the two divisions of the town. The governing body consists of a provost, two bailies, and six councillors. The cotton manufacture was formerly carried on here and in the neighbourhood to some extent, but it is now extinct. The staple at present is wool, furnished from the surrounding country, and mostly supplied to the Yorkshire markets.

The places of worship are the Established church, which is considered to be the most elegant modern ecclesiastical structure in the south of Scotland, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Douglas Academy, founded by Samuel Douglas, Esq., of Jamaica, and the Ewart Institute, founded by James and John Ewart, merchants, of this district, are richly endowed educational establishments; they have recently been incorporated under the title of the Newton Stewart Educational Trust. A Gothic monument to Randolph, ninth Earl of Galloway, was erected in 1875, at a cost of £1,000. An institution called the Industrial Home has been founded by a few benevolent ladies, for the support of about fifty destitute and orphan girls. There is a Mechanics' Institute in the town in a very flourishing condition; it is liberally supported by the gentry of the neighbourhood, the news-room being supplied with the leading newspapers and periodicals, and is open to the public every evening; the library contains about 1,000 volumes. One of the finest buildings in the south of Scotland is the M'Millan Hall, opened in 1885, and erected at a cost of £5,000, which sum was left for that purpose by the family from which the hall derives its name, and who formerly carried on business in Newton Stewart. It is a handsome structure in the Italian style, and is imposingly situated in the centre of the town. The British Linen Company, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, have each a branch located here. The four principal hotels are the Galloway Arms, the Grapes, the Queen's Arms, and the Crown. Agricultural improvement has been carried on to a great and beneficial extent in this district. At the upper extremity of that part of the town in Minnigaff parish there is a large moat hill, where David Graham, brother to Claverhouse, and superior of this district prior to the Revolution, administered justice. About three miles to the north of the town are the remains of Castle-Stewart, formerly belong (as before stated) to a branch of the Galloway family, but now in possession of Mrs. E. E. Heron Maxwell-Blair, of Penningham. New works were completed in 1883 for providing the town with water by gravitation, the source of supply being the Coldstream burn, about four miles distant. About half way between the intake at the burn and the town a tank and filter have been constructed, the former having a capacity of 100,000 gallons. The cost of the works was upwards of £4,000. The weekly market is held on Friday; cattle markets are held on the second Friday in every month, and the annual hiring fairs are held on the second Friday in April and October, and the horse fairs in February, June, and November. According to the returns for 1881, the population of Newton-Stewart was 3,070, and by those for 1891, 3,832.

The parish of PENNINGHAM (or Penningham) extends along the right bank of the river Cree for about fifteen miles, by a breadth of from three to five, bounded by Wigtown on the south, and Kirkcubright on the west. The north of the town district is moorish and uncultivated, and chiefly adapted to pasture. Acreage, 39,438; population in 1881, 3,940, and in 1891, 3,749.

MINNIGAFF is a large parish in the western part of the stewartry of Kirkcubright, bounded on the west by Cree, over which is a bridge (before noticed) forming the communication with the parish of Penningham and the town of Newton Stewart. The parish is 17 miles in length and 11 in breadth. In the lower parts the land has been a good deal improved, especially towards the margin of the Cree, which stream being navigable for several miles, has been of much benefit to agriculture. This river likewise produces excellent fish of various kinds, and abundance of salmon. The major portion of the parish is devoted to pasturage, and sustains large flocks of sheep and numerous herds of black cattle. Messrs. R. and W. Callander, timber merchants and saw mill proprietors, have extensive works here, and employ a large number of workpeople. There are two places of worship—one each of the Established and Free churches. Within a mile of Newton Stewart, but in the parish of Minnigaff, is Kirroughtree, beautifully situated on the side of a hill, surrounded by fine woods, and intersected by tasteful serpentine walks. A romantic grotto in the grounds is formed out of an old stone quarry, and is well worth inspection. Acreage of the parish, 88,130; population in 1881, 1,587, and in 1891, 1,216.

PORTPATRICK

IS a parish and seaport town, the latter 133 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 89 s.s.w. from Glasgow, between 34 and 35 w. from Wigtown, the same distance w. by s. from Newton Stewart, and rather more than 7 s.w. from Stranraer; it is distant from Dublin 117 miles, from Belfast 36, and from Donaghadee 21 (19 nautical) miles. It is situated on the coast of the North Channel, and was for about 200 years the great thoroughfare from the north of Ireland, being the nearest port of Great Britain to that country, and the best place of crossing from one country to the other. The town is small, but its situation delightful, having a fine southern exposure, backed by a ridge of small hills, and is a great resort for visitors during the summer months on account of the salubrity of its climate. It was formerly, with the estate of Dunskey, the property of Lord Montgomery, whose residence was the old castle of Dunskey, which stands in the neighbourhood, on the bank of a tremendous precipice overhanging the sea, and was once a building of considerable strength, as appears from its interesting remains. The late Sir James Hunter-Blair subsequently became possessed of the castle, and it is to the exertion of that gentleman that the town and harbour are indebted for many improvements. The quay, on which is a lighthouse, was at one time one of the finest in Britain, but is now almost in ruins. Many years ago extensive and important improvements were made at the harbour, under the auspices of the Government and direction of Sir John Rennie, for the accommodation of Her Majesty's packets, and a new basin of about 200 feet square, which is connected with the harbour by means of a channel, containing ten feet of water at low tides, was constructed. The mail communication between this place and Ireland, however, ceased in the year 1849, and since that date the business of this locality has diminished to a great extent. This place has railway communication with all parts of Great Britain. The town is also a lifeboat and rocket apparatus station. The places of worship are the parish church, and one belonging to the Free church. The first-named is a neat edifice, with an embattled tower, and is a conspicuous as well as an ornamental object; the latter, erected in 1883, is a handsome building in the Gothic style. There is also a good Board school. Acreage of the parish, 9,094; population in 1831, 1,285, and in 1891, 1,218; of the town, 514.

PORT WILLIAM AND MOCHRUM.

PORT WILLIAM is a prosperous village in the parish of MOCHRUM, 24 miles S.E. from Stranraer, 15 S.E. from Glenluce, and 9 N.W. from Whitburn, situated on the bay of Luce. The harbour though not of great extent, is commodious and safe, and from it large quantities of grain and potatoes are exported to Glasgow, Liverpool, and other ports on the west coast. In the vicinity is Monreith, the handsome residence and demesne of Sir Herbert E. Maxwell, Bart., M.P. proprietor of the place. The mansion, which stands on the bank of a fine lake, commands an extensive prospect of the bay of Luce, the shore of Galloway, the Isle of Man, and the coast of Cumberland. Near it is an old castle, surrounded by lofty trees, and contiguous are the remains of the old parish church, now occupied as a place of sepulture by the family of Maxwell, whose ancestors formerly possessed the estate. The houses in general are very well built, and afford excellent accommodation for families and tourists during the bathing season. The principal hotel is the Monreith Arms. The places of worship are a church each of the Free and United Presbyterians. There are also commodious Board schools. Whauphill is the nearest railway station, 6 miles distant. Population in 1881, 755, and in 1891, 750.

The parish of MOCHRUM is about 10 miles in length, and extends inland between 4 and 5 miles. The Castle, or "Old Place," of Mochrum, surrounded by lakes, is a very ancient and picturesque building in an inland part of the parish. It was formerly the family seat of the Dunbars, knights of Mochrum, but has for many years been the property of the Marquis of Bute, who has made alterations at considerable expense. The village of Mochrum, which is about a mile and a half from Port William, contains nothing worthy of mention, except the parish church and a Board school. Whauphill is the nearest railway station, 4½ miles distant. Acreage of the parish, 24,071; population in 1881, 2,315, and in 1891, 2,166.

STRANRAER,

WITH THE PARISHES OF INCH, KIRKCOLM, LESWALT, CAIRNRYAN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STRANRAER (or Stranrawer) is a respectable and ancient town, a royal burgh, and the seat of a presbytery, as well as a parish, 81 miles S.S.W. from Glasgow, nearly 10 N.W. from Glenelg, and rather more than 8 N.E. from Portpatrick, eligibly situated at the inner extremity of Loch Ryan. The principal street is of great length, but the houses have not been erected on the most regular plan. In the centre of the town stands a building, originally a castle, of considerable antiquity, but the date of its foundation has not been satisfactorily ascertained. It is mentioned in a charter granted by James VI., and is called the "Tower, fortalice, and manor place of Chapel," and was once the residence of the family of Kennedy, of Chapel and Chrychan. The Tower, or Castle, as it is now termed, was used by Graham of Claverhouse as his head-quarters in the district during the Covenanted period. In the year 1614 it was inhabited by John Kennedy, of Grennan, and Elizabeth, his wife, then Lady Auchtriloor. The lands of Auchtriloor are immediately contiguous to the burgh of Stranraer, and are now the property of the Earl of Stair. Many new buildings have recently been erected, of a very handsome and substantial character. Among them may be mentioned the County Buildings, in Lewis street, opened in 1874, and containing court house, town hall, and offices for the procurator fiscal, sheriff clerk, and police; the establishments of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited; the Clydesdale Bank, Limited; the British Linen Company, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. A Reformatory, now under Government control, was opened in 1855. Wood turning, bookbinding, and the manufacture of netting, twine, and paper bags are carried on successfully in the institution, beside the making of clothing and shoes for the requirements of the inmates. The old Town Hall, in George street, is now used as an armoury and drill hall for the volunteers. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday in every month, a burgh court occasionally on Saturday, and the sheriff of the county holds a court weekly, and a small debt court fortnightly.

As a royal burgh, the town is governed by a provost, two bailies, a dean of guild, and fourteen councillors. The bay of Stranraer affords excellent anchorage—as the motto on the burgh arms (Tutissima Statio), implies, and the harbour is now large and commodious, consisting of west pier, east pier, and breakwater, affording excellent accommodation to all classes of vessels. The east pier, which is about to be enlarged and rebuilt by the railway companies in order to accommodate the large cross-channel traffic now passing by the Stranraer route between Great Britain and Ireland, is connected with the railway by a harbour branch, by which cattle, goods and passengers are conveyed direct from the steamers. There is eighteen feet of water at high tide at the east pier, and vessels of 1,100 tons burthen can discharge there. The depth of water in the loch, which is sheltered from all winds, is such as to allow a fleet of men of war to ride at anchor with perfect safety. It was at Cairnryan that the Prince of Wales first landed on Scottish soil. The bay at one time afforded a splendid supply of oysters, the right of fishing for which belongs exclusively, by ancient charter, to Sir William Wallace, of Loch Ryan. This fishing employed upwards of 100 fishermen for eight months in the year, and the quality of the oysters was so fine that the men could earn good wages, and pay for the privilege of fishing about £800 a year. The beds have latterly become impoverished, thus rendering the fishery unprofitable. There are, however, several kinds of white fish caught abundantly, and occasionally herrings are got equal in quality to the best obtained on any other part of the Scottish coast. The sea bathing is excellent, and the loch is beautifully situated for villas. There is a coastguard station here, and a custom house. Stranraer is peculiar from the absence of any large manufactories or works, though there are several small ones, the product of which is exclusively confined to the district; there is also a brewery, and mills, through which large quantities of grain pass every year. It is particularly noticeable for the extensive nurseries on all sides of the town, which afford employment to many of the inhabitants. The district is agricultural; grain, cheese, and all kinds of farm produce and cattle being conveyed to Glasgow regularly by railway, and twice a week by steamer. A steamer runs daily between Stranraer and Larne in connection with railways on either side. The principal inns are the King's Arms, Meikle's Hotel, the George, the Albion, and the Royal.

The Established church, in Church street, is a very handsome structure, in the pointed style of architecture, the front lofty, and surmounted with pinnacles. The interior is capacious, with galleries and a commanding pulpit, and the whole has an aspect of chaste neatness. The second church connected with the Establishment is situated at the western extremity of the town, on a lofty eminence, and with its tower is a conspicuous landmark from the loch. This church was called by the late eminent Scottish divine, Dr. Chalmers, when on a visit, "the visible church," from its commanding appearance from all sides. There are other places of worship for various denominations, inclusive of two Free churches. The cemetery, beautifully situated above the town, presents a fine view of the loch; it is very tastefully laid out, and contains some handsome monuments. Numerous seats, adorned with all the charms of nature and art, ornament the neighbourhood of Stranraer. Loch Inch Castle, the residence of the Earl of Stair, is three miles distant, and Castle Kennedy, in the vicinity, the property of the same nobleman, is surrounded with delightful and picturesque scenery. The Earl of Stair throws open to the public the grounds of the latter every Wednesday and Saturday. The collection of araucarias is one of the attractions of the place to all lovers of horticulture, and it is said to be the finest collection in Great Britain. The following, situated in the vicinity of the burgh, are also worthy of notice; Locknaw Castle, the residence of Sir Andrew Agnew, Bart.; Corswall House, J. Carrick Moore, Esq.; Loch Ryan House, John A. A. Wallace, Esq.; Logan, James M'Donnell, Esq.; Rephad, Thomas C. Greig, Esq.; and Balgrogan, Mrs. Maitland. The market is held on Friday. The following are the annual fairs:—For horses, the first Monday in January, the Thursday before the 29th of June, and the Monday before the second Thursday in October; for cattle, on the third Friday in every month, commencing in April and ending in November. Other fairs for general business are also held in May and August. The population of Stranraer, according to the census for 1881, was 6,415, and for 1891, 6,193.

The parish of INCH lies on the shore of Loch Ryan, extending nine miles in length by a breadth nearly as great. The parish church stands on the margin of the lake, in which there is small beautifully wooded island. The lake is nearly divided by a neck of land, on which are the ruins of a castle, formerly the seat of the Kennedys, a powerful family in the neighbourhood in the days of the border raids. Acreage, 90,844. Population in 1881, 3,766.

KIRKCOLM parish is bounded by Loch Ryan on the east, measuring a square of about five miles. The church is pleasantly situated near the shore of the lake, north of the bay called the Wig. Stranraer is the nearest railway station, 6½ miles distant. Acreage, 18,318. Population in 1881, 1,847, and in 1891, 1,658.

The parish of LESWALT lies betwixt the Irish Channel on the west and Loch Ryan on the east. It is about the same size and of much the same form as Kirkcolm. The surface of this district is most agreeably varied with hill and dale, while from the sea the coast presents bold and rocky features. Stranraer is the nearest railway station, 3½ miles distant. Acreage, 12,523. Population in 1881, 2,656, and in 1891, 2,435.

CAIRNRYAN is a small village on the eastern margin of Loch Ryan, 6 miles N.E. from Stranraer, which is the nearest railway station. The harbour affords safe anchorage for vessels, which frequently take refuge here, and there is a lofty lighthouse for their guidance. John A. A. Wallace, Esq. has a residence here. Population in 1891, 107.

WHITHORN,

WITH THE ISLE OF WHITHORN AND PARISH OF GLASSERTON.

WHITHORN, or Whithorn, is a town of considerable antiquity, and a royal burgh, in the parish of Whithorn, 40 miles E. by S. from Portpatrick, 32 S.E. from Stranraer, 19 S. from Newton Stewart and 11 S. from Wigtown; situated not far distant from Wigtown Bay. It was originally inhabited by a tribe of Britons called the Nantes, and was then a town of some consequence; it was mentioned by Ptolemy under the name of Leuconophibia, the Saxons called it Hwittoern, and from the latter the appellation Whithorn is derived. St. Ninian built a church here in the fourth century, which Bede mentions as the first that was erected of stone. During the eighth century it was the seat of the bishops of Candida Casa, and it formed the episcopal capital of a bishopric of Galloway in the twelfth century. After the period of the Reformation, however, it is seldom mentioned in public transactions, and seems to have sunk into obscurity. The town consists chiefly of one street running from north to south with several others diverging from it. From successive kings Whithorn received various charters constituting it a burgh of barony; it is now a royal burgh; but the period when it attained that distinction does not appear. It is governed by a provost, two bailies and six councillors. The Town Hall (opened in 1858) is a plain but substantially-built structure, erected at a cost of £1,100, obtained by public subscription, and will accommodate about 500 persons. Whithorn has facilities of railway communication by means of the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire Joint line. The local trade is very inconsiderable, and merely of a retail and domestic character. There are two banking establishments, branches respectively of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the National Bank of Scotland, Limited. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church one each for United and Reformed Presbyterians, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The parish church is remarkably neat as well as spacious, and much superior to most of the parish kirks in this county; it is erected partly on the venerable ruins of the priory founded by St. Ninian, before mentioned, and who is said to have been the first who converted the Picts to the Christian faith. These ruins are remarkably grand and imposing. They contain several large vaults, some beautiful Saxon and Gothic arches, and disapidated sculptured armorial bearings of Scotland, the bishops of Galloway, and the Coultcharts of Coultchart. The inhabitants support a subscription library and a Bible Society, and there are Board schools in the town. A cattle market is held on the second Thursday in each month from April to December, and an annual fair in July. The acreage of the parish is 11,891; the population in 1881 was 2,929, and in 1891, 2,574, and of the town, 1,401.

The ISLE OF WHITHORN is a pleasant village, about 3 miles S.E. from Whithorn, of which it is the port. Near the village stand the remains of an old church, said to be the first built in this part of the kingdom, or as some affirm, the first founded in Scotland, and its preservation is desirable from its venerable age and interesting origin. The village contains a Free church and Board schools. Whithorn is the nearest railway station, 8 miles distant. Population in 1881, 352, and in 1891, 316.

The parish of GLASSERTON lies on the east coast of Luce Bay, bounded by Whithorn on the east, Mochrum on the west, and Kirkinner on the north; it extends seven miles and a half in length, by a general breadth of two and a half, except in its northern part, where it is nearly double that space. On the coast near its north-western confines is Lige Point, with a small haven, called Moureith Bay; a village at its head is termed the MILLTOWN of MONREITH. The church and Board schools are in the southern and northern quarters of the parish. The nearest railway station is at Whithorn, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant. Acreage, 13,284; population in 1891, 1,203, and in 1891, 1,154.

WIGTOWN,

AND THE PARISH OF KIRKINNER, WHAUPHILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WIGTOWN is a royal burgh, the seat of a presbytery, and the capital of the county, 105 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 58 s.w. from Dumfries, 28 e. by s. from Stranraer, and 8 s. from Newton Stewart, pleasantly situated on an eminence near the north side of the Bladnoch Water, two miles from its junction with the Cree, or Bay of Wigtown. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having come into existence during the Middle Ages, from the erection of a castle on the spot by a band of successful Saxon invaders, who conferred on it the name of Wig, from the place having been contested in a battle, the adjunct ton or "town," being afterwards given when the town arose. The castle of Wigtown subsequently became a royal residence, but the town itself does not appear to have been conspicuous till the reign of David II., when it gave the title of earl to the family of Fleming. The Wigtownshire railway connects the town with the rest of Scotland and with England. The principal street is a parallelogram, of which the internal space is enclosed by a wall and iron railings, and the centre laid out in walks and a bowling-green, forming an agreeable promenade for the inhabitants. At the end is a very handsome modern cross of granite, sculptured in an elegant and tasteful manner. At the other extremity are the County Buildings, having a tower of considerable height, which imparts a degree of dignity to the town. The buildings contain the court room, the sheriff's small debt court and the ordinary courts, which latter are held every Tuesday in time of session. A monument has been erected here in memory of Margaret Wilson and Margaret McLachlan, the martyrs who perished in the Bladnoch Water, in the year 1685. It is situated on the top of Windybill, from which there is a magnificent view of the town and surrounding country, and was constructed by public subscription at a cost of £200. Many new buildings have been erected, some of them of a very tasteful and costly description, such as the new County Buildings before mentioned, the Board schools, the gaol and the banks; the latter are branches of the British Linen Company, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited. The burgh altogether may be considered in an improving condition. The harbour of Wigtown is safe, and has a depth of water for vessels of three hundred tons burthen. Wigtown is the seat of a custom house, comprehending the creeks of Wigtownshire and those of the stewartry of Kirkcubright, from the Mull of Galloway to the mouth of the river Fleet. In the year 1581 Wigtown was specified as one of the king's free burghs. It is, as a royal burgh, governed by a provost, two bailies and fifteen councillors.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, and a chapel for Roman Catholics. The parish of Wigtown extends five miles in length by four in breadth. It has several eminences throughout, but is in general flat and fertile. At the western extremity of the parish are nineteen large granite stones, placed in a circular form. They are supposed to have belonged to a Druidical place of worship or sacrifice, while tradition points to the spot as the tomb of King Galdus. The market, entitled by charter to be holden on Saturday, is now discontinued. Fairs are also chartered to be held at Candelmas, on the first Monday in April and the first Friday in July and August, all old style, but they are discontinued. A monthly cattle market, on the fourth Friday of each month during the season, has been established, and there is an annual cattle show in July, which is numerously attended. The parish of Wigtown contains 7,805 acres, and in 1881 the population was 2,195, and in 1891, 1,911, the town numbering 1,236.

The kirk town of KIRKINNER is about 3 miles s. from Wigtown, on the road to Garieston, and is remarkable for its beautiful and picturesque scenery. The principal ornament in this neighbourhood is the stately mansion of R. Vans Agnew, Esq. Here are also the remains of the ancient castle of Baldoon, formerly a residence of the Duubars, an incident in which family is supposed to have served as the foundation of the story of the "Bride of Lammemoor." The parish extends three miles along Wigtown Bay, the Bladnoch Water dividing it on the north from Wigtown. An Established church and Board school are in the village. The ruins of Longcastle church (the parish now incorporated with Kirkinner) stand at the southern extremity of the parish. Kirkinner is a station on the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint railway. Acreage of the parish, 15,250. Population in 1881, 1,597, and in 1891, 1,455.

WHAUPHILL is a small village in the parish of Kirkinner, about 5 miles s. from Wigtown, and is a station on the Portpatrick and Wigtownshire joint railway.
